hyp'si-ste'god, a. Shaped like a roof; applied by anthropologists to a skull that is high. — hyp"si-sten'o-ceph'a-ly, n. Craniol. Excessive narrowness and height of skull. — hyp"so-ba-rom'e-ter, n. A barometer specially used to determine altitudes; a mountain barometer. 2. A former name of the boiling-point thermometer. — hyp"so-har'some't'ric, a. — hyp'so-ma, n. An instrument for measuring the true molars of most Bovidæ. — hyp-sog'ra-phy, n. The science of the observation or description of the heights of the earth's surface or those of the sea. — hyp"so-graph'ic, hyp"so-graph'i-cal, a. — hyp"so'i-so-therm, n. Meteor. An isotherm on a chart or diagram representing a vertical section of the atmosphere.

hyp-som'e-ter, 1 hip-som'i-tər; 2 hȳp-sŏm'e-tər, n. 1. An instrument for measuring the height above the sea-level by determining the atmospheric pressure through observation of the boiling-point of water. hyp"so-ther-mom'e-ter†. — hyp-som'e-try, n. The art of measuring, by any method, the heights of points in the earth's surface above the sea-level. — barometric hypsometry, measurement by means of the barometer of distances above and below the level of the sea. — hyp"so-met'ric, hyp"so-met'ri-cal, a. — hyp"so-met'ri-cal-ly, adv. — hyp-som'e-trist, n.

hyp"so-pho'bi-a, n. Pathol. A morbid dread of high places. — hyp"so-phyl'lum, n. Bot. A bract, or the like, in plant-inflorescence. hyp"so-phyl'lar, hyp"so-phyl'i; hyp'so-phyll'i-. — hyp"so-phyl'lar, hyp"so-phyl'la-ry, a.

hyp-so'sis, 1 hip-sō'sis; 2 hȳp-sō'sis, n. Gr. Ch. 1. The elevation of the Host; also, of the panagia. 2. The lifting up of the cross; also, Holy-Cross day (Sept. 14). [< Gr. hypsōsis, elevation, < hypsoō, on high.]

hyp'u-ral, 1 hip-yū'ral; 2 hȳp-yŭ'ral. Ich. I. a. Situated below the tail, as the bones supporting the fin rays. See illus. under HETEROCERCY. II. n. A hypural bone. [< HYP- + Gr. oura, tail.]

hy'rac, } 1 hai'rak-, hai'ra-ko-; 2 hȳ'răc-, hȳ'ra-co-, hy'ra-co-, }] From Gr. hyrax (hyrac-), shrew-mouse: combining forms. — Hy'ra-ces, n. pl. Mam. The Hyracoidea. — hy-ra'ce-um, n. A hard blackish-brown product of the South African hyrax, and to have physiological effects resembling those of castoreum. — hy-ra'ci-um; — Hy'ra-chus, n. Paleon. A genus of Eocene perissodactyl ungulates, more primitive than Hyracodon, but related to it. — Hy-rac'i-des, n. pl. Mam. The only family of Hyracoidea. — hy-rac'id, n., — hy-rac'i-form, a. Having the appearance of a hyrax. — Hy-rac'o-don'ti-dæ, n. pl. Mam. A Tertiary family of perissodactyl rhinoceros-like ungulates having the upper molars and premolars alike and with cross-crests, the external cusps of molars fused into walls, and canines developed. Hy-rac'o-don, n. (t. g.) — hy- rac'o-dont, a.— hy-rac'o-don'tid, n.— hy-rac'o-don'told, a. & n.— Hy''ra-col'de-a, n. pl. Mam. An order or subordor of ungulates with rodent upper incisors, numerous dorsolumbar vertebræ, and 2 ovary placentæ.— hy''ra-col'a. & n.— hy''ra-col'de-an, a. & n.— Hy''ra-co-the''ri-i'ne, n. pl. Mam. A subfamily of lophiodontoid ungulates having the external lobes of the upper molars separated and the lobes of the lower scarcely more than crescentic.— hy''ra-co-the''ri-um, n. (t. g.) — hy''ra-co-the'ri-an, a.— hy''ra-co-the'ri-ine, a. & n.

hy'rax, t. Tai'rakes; 2 hÿ'rĭks, n. 1. A small hare-like hyracoidean ungulate mammal of Africa and adjoining Asiatic regions, as the cony of the Bible, the damans, and the klipdas. See illus. under DAMAN. 2. [B-] A genus typical of Hyracidæ. < Gr. hyrax, shrewmouse.]

Hyr-ca'ni-a, 1 her-kē'ni-ə; 2 hÿr-kā'nĭ-a, n. A province on the ancient Persian and Parthian empires, S. and S. E. of the Hyrcanian (Caspian) sea; the modern Asterabad.

Hyr'ca-nite, n. The rugged Pyrrhus, like the Hyrcanian beast.
SHAKESPEARE Hamlet act II, sc. 2.

Hyr-ka-ni'al [Gr.]— Hyr-ca'ni-an, a. Hyr'can.

Hyr-ca'nus, 1 her-kē'nus; 2 hÿr-cā'nŭs, n. 1. Bib. (Apocrypha, R. V.). 2 Mac. iii, 11. 2. H. I., Joannes (175-105? B. C.), a high priest; prince of the Jews. 3. H. II., Joannes (--30 B. C.), a high priest and king of the Jews; executed by Herod. Hyr-ka-nos't [Gr.].

hyr'gol, 1 hûr'gŏl or -gol; 2 hyr'gŏl or -gōl, n. Pharm. Mercury as used in the preparation of ointments.

Hyr'tl, 1 hir'tl; 2 hyr'tl, Joseph (1/7/1810—/17/1894). A Hungarian anatomist and author. [Utah.

Hy'rum, 1 hai'rum; 2 hÿ'rŭm, n. A city in Cache county, Ut'son, 1 hai'sən; 2 hÿ'sn, n. [China.] A grade of green tea from China.

Hyson is a corruption of yutsien, before the rains. S. WELLS WILLIAMS Middle Kingdom ii, 47 (ed. 1883.)

— hy'son-skin'', n. The worthless part winnowed from hyson tea.

hy'-spy'', 1 hai'-spai'; 2 hÿ'-spÿ', n. Same as I-SPY.

hys'sop, 1 his'əp; 2 hÿs'op (XIII), n. 1. A bushy herb (Hyssopus officinalis) of the mint family, the only known species of the genus, about 2 feet high, with linear-oblong, entire, sessile leaves, and small clusters of blue flowers. It is cultivated in the United States for repute d medicinal qualities. 2. An unidentified plant furnishing the hyssop used in the Mosaic purificatory and sacrificial rites: thought by some to have been a species of marjoram (Origanum maru); by others, the capers-plant (Capparis spinosa). 3. Anything the term was used as the name of any common article in the form of a brush or a broom. < AS. ysopp, < L. hyssopus, < Gr. hysssōpos, aromatic plant, < Heb. ēzōph, aromatic plant.]— anise hyssop, a species of giant hyssop (Agastache anethiodora) of the northwestern United States, with anise-scented leaves.— bastard h., a small germander (Teucrium polium) of southern Europe: cultivated in gardens.— fragrant giant h., the anise hyssop.— giant h., any species of Agastache, a genus of tall, perennial, chiefly American herbs of the mint family, with serrate leaves, and blue or purplish flowers clustered in terminal spikes.

Hys-tas'pes, 1 his-tas'pīz; 2 hÿs-tās'pēz, n. A Persian satrap, father of Darius I., who lived about 550 B. C. Hy-sta'spēz [Gr.].

hys'ter-. See HYSTERO-.

hys''ter-al'gi-a, 1 his''tər-al'ji-ə; 2 hÿs''tər-ăl'jĭ-a, n. Pathol. Neuralgia of the womb; uterine pain. [< Gr. hysteralgia, < hystera, womb, + algos, pain.]— hys''ter-al'gic, a.

hys'ter-an'thous, 1 his''tər-an'thus; 2 hÿs''tər-ăn'thŭs, a. Bot. Having the leaves appear later than the flowers, as the poplar, willow, etc. [< Gr. hysteros, latter, + anthos, flower.]

hys''ter-ec'to-my, 1 his''tər-ek'tə-mi; 2 hÿs''tər-ĕc'tə-my, n. Surg. The operation for the complete removal of the womb by excision. [< Gr. hystera, womb + ektomē, < ek, out, + temnein, to cut.

hys''ter-el-ec'sis, n. Pathol. Ulceration of the uterus.

hys''ter-e'sis, 1 his''tər-i'sis; 2 hÿs''tər-ē'sĭs, n. Physics. The tendency of a magnetic substance to persist in any state of magnetization; that property of a medium by virtue of which work is done in changing the direction or intensity of magnetic force among its parts; by extension, some analogous phenomenon, as in dielectrics.

The amount of flux of lines of force which results from the application of a definite force to a substance depends upon whether the force has been increased or decreased to its definite value. This flux is greater in the latter case than in the former. This phenomenon is termed hysteresis. A curve drawn so as to show the coordinate relation between the flux and a force, continuously varied between maximum and minimum limits, is loop-shaped and encloses an area which is proportional to an energy loss which accompanies the operation and which appears as heat. The loop is termed an hysteresis loop. [< Gr. hysterēsis, < hysteros, latter.]

The permeability varies enormously with the amount of the magnetising force, and in a manner desperately complicated by magnetic retentiveness, hysteresis according to Ewing's designation. WM. J. HOPKINS Elem. Physics vol. II, p. 476. N. Y. 1890.]

— dielectric or electrostatic hysteresis, one in which the flux is electrostatic, the force electric, and the substance dielectric.— elastic h., an effect similar to magnetic hysteresis in iron, noticeable in the proportion of strain to stress, when the pressure applied to an elastic body is by turns diminished and increased.— mechanical h., = elastic h.— loss of heat resulting from hysteresis.— h. receiver, in wireless telegraphy, a receiver whose action is controlled by magnetic hysteresis in iron affected by Hertzian waves.— magnetic h., one in which the flux is magnetic, the force is magnetizing, and the material is paramagnetic.— viscous h., same as TIME-LAG OF MAGNETISM, under TIME.— hys''ter-et'ic, a. hys''ter-et'ic-al; = hys''ter-e'sic.— hysteretic cycle, the cycle of operations attendant upon the fluxing of a material from a maximum in one direction through zero to an equal maximum in the other direction and back through zero to the initial condition.— hys''ter-et'i-cal-ly, adv.

hys-te'ri-a, 1 his-tī'ri-ə; 2 hÿs-tē'rĭ-a, n. Pathol. A nervous affection occurring typically in paroxysms of laughing and crying alternately, with a choking sensation in the throat, but often as a counterfeit of some organic disease; hysterics.

The main underlying cause of hysteria is heredity, to which are added other causes that bring on the manifestations of the disease. The affection may occur at all ages, most frequently between the ten-and-twenty years of life; not quite so often in men as in women. . . . Among the occasional causes of hysteria mental excitement is the most conspicuous. A single emotion or shock may be sufficient, as constitutes the hysteria in persons who are hereditarily predisposed, and who are weakened by a faulty education, by religious expiations with fasting and castigations, by mental recoil, or by sexual abuse. HYSTERIA. C. REISSIG AND SAMPT ELY JELLIFFE in The Standard Family Physician p. 645. [P. & W. '97.]

Hysteria may be fitly called mimosa, from its counterfeiting so many diseases. COLERIDGE Table Talk May 23, 1830.]

[< Gr. hystera, womb, prob. < hysteros, latter, lower.]

— anxious h., hysteria (generally), a condition of morbid apprehension arising from obsessions of fear.— cataleptic h., a form of hysteria attended by sudden suspension of sense and voluntary motion.— mental h., = anxious h.— spasmodic h., = hysteria.

hys-te'ri-ac, 1 his-tī'ri-ak; 2 hÿs-tē'rĭ-ăc, n. One subject to Hys-te'ri-a-cs, 1 his-tī'ri-ə-kis; 2 hÿs-tē'rĭ-ă-cĭs, n. pl. Bot. An order of hypogynous exotics having a somewhat elongated fruit-body with an enclosing wall opening by a long slit. Hys''ter-i-ln'e-æ. [< HYSTERIA.]

hys-ter'ic, 1 his-ter'ik; 2 hÿs-tĕr'ĭc, n. [Rare.] A fit of hysteria.

hys-ter'i-cal, 1 his-ter'i-kəl; 2 hÿs-tĕr'ĭ-cal, a. Med. 1. Pertaining to, of the nature of, or affected with hysterics or hysteria.

Faith or more hinders the sinking of the spirits (as it is called) in an hysteric illness than the rising of the pulse in a fever.
S. ROGERS Table Talk vol. II, p. 7. N. Y. 1818.]

2. Like hysterics; fitfully and violently emotional; as, hysterical religion. [< L. hystericus, < Gr. hystērikos, < hystera, uterus.] hys-ter'ic,.— hysterical breast, a painful swelling of the breast in the puerperal state.— h. insanity (Pathol.), a mental derangement characterized by sudden and uncontrollable changes of emotion.— hys-ter'i-cal-ly, adv.

hys-ter'ics, 1 his-ter'iks; 2 hÿs-tĕr'ĭcs, n. Med. The aggregate of phenomena manifested by hysteria. his''ter-isms:.

hys-ter'ics, 1 his-ter'iks; 2 hÿs-tĕr'ĭcs, n. pl. 1. A paroxysm or paroxysms of hysteria, especially when characterized by uncontrollable or apparently uncontrollable emotional outbursts or changes. 2. Hysteria.

— his-ter'i-form, a. Resembling hysteria.

Hys''ter-in-ter'a, 1 his''tər-in-tī'rə; 2 hÿs''tĕr-ĭn-tē'rə, n. pl. Bot. Same as HYSTERIALES.

hys''ter-i'tis, 1 his''tər-ai'tis or -i'tis; 2 hÿs''tĕr-ī'tĭs or -ī'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the womb. [< Gr. hystera, womb, + -itis.]

Roman.	Black Letter.	Script.

I, i, 1 ai; 2 ĭ, n. [pers. I's, or Is, 1 aiz; 2 ĭz, pl.] 1. A letter: the ninth in the English alphabet. It is historically the sign of a high front vowel heard open and short in it, close and long in machine. The original name of the letter was I (rhiming with bee), but by the end of the 16th century this sound had been quite generally converted into the diphthong ai; compare AS. wīf, > wife (waif). The consequence was that the old name was changed to ei and the old function assigned to e (see under E). When the less short i occurs in an unstressed syllable its articulation is less close and less clear, as in habit, being indistinguishable from that of e in the same position. Compare habit and pocket.

The i of machine is the highest vowel that can be uttered without a consonantal interference. If, then, this high i is shortened, without being squeezed through a passage so narrow as to produce a true consonant, we have the so-called 'palatal semivowel' heard at the beginning of yet (see under y and under j). As the final element of a diphthong i interchanges freely with y, the tendency being to avoid i at the end of a word: compare aisle, oil, boy, moist, oyster. In combinations ai, ey, ei, ay (ail, day, veil, they), the i (or y) is heard faintly or not at all. In ui (fruit, suit) it is silent, the ui being only a symbol for ū or ü, as the case may be.

What is popularly but erroneously called 'long i' is a diphthong of which the first element varies between a, e, and o. Normally it is nearest to a; wherefore ai is used as its symbol in key 1 of this dictionary.

Before r in an accented syllable i is now generally pronounced ə; compare fir, thirst.

The i sounds are the most frequent of all vowel sounds in English; i averages 5.90, I [I] 2.80 per cent. of the sounds on the pages of our literature. W. D. WHITNEY Oriental and Linguistic Studies second series, ch. 8, p. 274. [c. 1874.]

Capital I is from Roman I, < Early Greek 𐌉, < Phœnician 𐤉, < hieratic 𓂝, < hieroglyphic 𓇋𓂝.

The hieroglyph is parallels. The Phenician stood for y, the Greek for i. The Greek name is iota, > jot. The O.S. rune was called ēs, the Irish ir letter in the futhorc. The Roman name I is Englished as ai. Lower-case i was first dotted in the 14th century. I and J have but lately been separated. See J.

The history of the characters may be shown as follows:

2. An abbreviation: (1) Ida; Isaac: etc. (other personal names beginning with I). (2) Chem. Inactive; as, camphor. (3) Zool. Incisor, used on dental formulas. 3. A symbol noting: (1) As a Roman numeral (either I or i), one. Repeated, it indicates 2 or 3 units, as the case may be; as, II = 3. Before v, x, l, etc., it signifies minus 1; as, ix = 9. After v, x, l, etc., it signifies plus 1 or more if repeated; as, lii = 52. (2) Chem. Iodin. See ELEMENT. (3) Logic. A particular affirmative proposition. See A. (4) [I] Mush. (a) The imaginary unit $\sqrt{-1}$. (b) In vector analysis and quaternions, one of the three unit vectors. (5) The ninth in a class, order, group, or series; nine as a number or numeral. (6) Physics. [I] Current-density; intensity of magnetization. (7) Mech. [I] Moment of inertia. (8) Astron. [I] An orbit's inclination to the ecliptic. (9) The ninth letter of the alphabet impressed upon a type-body or type-bar; also, the perforation in a paper-roll for machine-cast composition representing this symbol. (10) A arbitrary designation for explanatory purposes applied to persons. See D, n., 3 (8). (11) In the international code of signals for ships, the letter denoted by a yellow flag containing a black circle. See plate of SIGNAL-FLAGS. (12) Cryst. In the Miller system of symbols, the general index of a form in the hexagonal system with reference to the third of the lateral axes.

I beam, in building, a beam, usually of rolled iron or steel, having an I-shaped cross-section. I iron, an angle iron of I-shaped cross-section. I bar.—I rail, a rail of approximately I-shaped section; a double-headed rail.

I, n. Metaph. The spiritual personality; the sentient, self-conscious subject; that which apprehends its own existence; the ego: the pronoun I used as a noun.

> The self, the I, is recognized in every act of intelligence, as the subject to which that act belongs.

i-am'bic, 1 ai-am'bik; 2 ī-ām'bic, a. 1. Pros. Marked by the use of the iambus; as, iambic poetry; the iambic pentameter.

> The iambic movement in verse approaches most nearly to the ordinary rhythm of prose. It was commonly used in Greek and Latin poetry as the meter of dialog, and it is by far the most common measure in English poetry. The "heroic couplet" is iambic pentameter, rimed in pairs; "blank verse" is unrimed iambic pentameter.

> His [Dante's] measure is iambic, free iambic, and every line consists, not of ten syllables, but of eleven, his native tongue having none other than feminine rhymes.
> G. H. CALVERT Essays Æsthetical p. 141. [n. & d. 1875.]

> Contemporary with the invention of the elegy was that of iambic poetry by Archilochus of Paros, . . . who applied it to an especial purpose, that of personal satire.

The sacred ibis (Ibis æthiopica) of the ancient Egyptians is white, except the ornamental plumes over the hind quarters, the bill, feet, and naked head, and part of the neck, which are black. It inhabits mainly the Nubian Nile basin, passing northward to Egypt in midsummer. The common glossy bay ibis (Plegadis falcinellus), with the head mostly feathered except between the eyes and bill, and of a prevailing chestnut color with metallic upper parts, is widely distributed throughout the Old World, and is also found in the southern United States. The white ibis (Guarana alba) and the scarlet ibis (Guarana rubra) have the head completely naked in front, and are tropical American species also found in the United States. Among the ancient Egyptians it was sacred to Thoth and was allowed at large in the temples. The ibis was said to devour the eggs of crocodiles and of all noxious reptiles and insects. To kill it was a crime. After death it was mummied, and the remains of many have been discovered at Thebes and elsewhere.

Ib'rĭ, 1 ib'rī; 2 ib'ri, n. Bib. 1 Chron. xxiv, 27. [Heb., Hebrew.]

Ib'sen, 1 ib'sen; 2 ib'sĕn, Henrik (¹/₂₀1828–⁵/₂₃1906). A Norwegian psychological dramatist and poet whose work is strongly marked with social purpose: Hedda Gabler; Peer Gynt. — Ib'sen-ism. n. The tendency or aim characteristic of Ibsen's writings, in which, under the guise of problem plays, social conventions are destructively criticized and satirized.

I-bu'rĭ, 1 ĭ-bū'rĭ; 2 ĭ-bu'ri, n. A prefecture in S. Hokushu [Hokkaido], Japan; capital, Horobira.

I-bye'ter, 1 ĭ-bī'tĕr; 2 ĭ-bī'ter, n. Zool. A genus of caracaras in South America; their plumage is dark, the throat and cheeks bare. [< Sp. ibitero, a bogus wayfaring.]

Ib'y-cus, 1 ĭb'ĭ-kus; 2 ĭb'y-cŭs, n. A Greek lyric poet who lived about 540 B. C. Ĭ'by-kost [Gr.-kost].

Ib'zan, 1 ĭb'zən; 2 ĭb'zan, n. Bib. Judges xii, 8. [Heb., splendid.]

-ic, suffix. 1. Used as an adjective termination with general sense 'of,' 'pertaining to,' or 'like,' as in artistic, or as a termination of nouns, as in logic. Some words ending in -ic are both adjectives and nouns; as, public (this termination was formerly written -ick, -ike, or -ick). Adjectives with the termination -ikos, which was very common in Greek, soon came to be used as nouns, either in the singular or in the neuter plural form -ika, to express affairs or matters pertaining to some department of life or knowledge. Sometimes both forms were in use with a distinction of sense: thus politik was the art of a statesman, while politika meant affairs of state. When adopted into the Romance languages these neuter plurals in -ika (through the Latin -ica) were used as singular nouns, and through this channel the English language has the forms arithmetic, logic, music, music, etc. After the 17th century it became customary to use the plural form -ics in names of sciences; thus, optics, statics, metaphysics, etc., which words are now construed as singular. In recent times the custom has been introduced from continental Europe of employing a form in -ic thus dogmatic, metaphysic. A few adjectives in -ic form adverbs in -ically, as publicly, but the adverb is usually from the secondary form -ical. See -ics, -icals. 2. Used in chemistry, in the names of compounds, to denote a higher valence of the element from which the compound is named than is expressed by the suffix -ous; as, nitric acid (HNO_3), nitrous acid (HNO_2). [< L. -icus, or Gr. -ikos.]

I. C., abbr. [L.] Iesus Christus (Jesus Christ).

I-ca'ĭ, 1 ī-sa'; 2 ī-cā', n. Same as PUTUMAYO.

I-ca'ĭ, n. 1. A department in Peru; 8,720 sq. m. 2. Its capital.

I'ca-bu-quam', 1 ī'sa-bo-kwām'; 2 ī'cā-bū-kwām', n. Same as CAMACUAM.

I'ca-cin, 1 ī'a'ka-sin; 2 ī'ca-cin, n. Same as ICICAIN.

I'ca-ra'ĭ, 1 ī'a'ka-ra'ĭ; 2 ī'ca-rā'ī, n. Bot. A genus of West-African shrubs, type of the family Icacinaceæ, with clustered flowers and scarlet fruit. I. manii is cultivated in hothouses. [< Sp. icaco, cocoa-plum.]

I'ca-ci-na'ceæ, 1 ī'a'ka-si-na'sē-ē; 2 ī'ca-cĭ-nā'cē-ē, n. pl. Bot. A family of tropical African trees, shrubs, and (rarely) herbs belonging to the order Saxifragales and containing 38 genera and 150 species. The tribe Lumiæ has calyx does not enlarge with the flower, which is dirupaceous or keylike. [< ICACINA.]

— I'ca-ci-na'ceous, a.

I-ca'co, 1 ĭ-kā'kō or -kă'kō; 2 ĭ-cā'co or -că'c̆o, n. [Sp. Am.] The cocoa-plum. I-ca'co-plum'†.

I-cac'o-re'a, 1 ĭ-kak'o-rī'ə; 2 ĭ-cāc'o-rē'a, n. Bot. Same as ANDIRA.

-ical, suffix. Of, pertaining to, or like. [< L. -icalis, < -icus, -ic, + -alis, of the kind of.]

In many cases adjectives in -ical do not differ, except emphonically, from the corresponding forms in -ic; as, symbolic, symbolical. In some cases the words are different in sense; as, politic, political. In many cases, especially when the form in -ic is used as a noun, the adjectival form is exclusively -ical; as, musical. Adjectives that have both the endings -ic and -ical form adverbs by adding -ly to the -ical form only; as, emphatically.

I'ca-ra'ĭ, 1 ī'a-ra-ma'ĭ; 2 ī'ca-rā-mā'a, n. Bib. (Douai).

I-ca'rĭ-a, 1 ĭ-ka'rĭ-ə; 2 ĭ-cā'rī-a, n. 1. A valley in Attica, Greece, near Mount Pentelicus, where interesting archeological discoveries have been made. 2. A communistic Utopia described by E. Cabet in his semi-philosophical romance Voyage en Icarie, published in 1840. 3. A settlement on a communistic basis made by Cabet and his followers in Texas (1848), which, in 1850, removed to Nauvoo, Ill., in 1850.

I-ca'rĭ-an, 1 ĭ-ka'rĭ-ən; 2 ĭ-cā'rī-an, a. 1. Class. Myth. Of or pertaining to Icarus, son of Dædalus.

Your Icarian flight melts into a grovelling existence.
THOMAS CARLYLE Sartor Resartus (Works, ii, p. 344. Ed. n. d. & co. 1870.)

2. Hence, high-flying; rash or adventurous; presumptuous. 3. Belonging or relating to the various communistic settlements founded or suggested by Étienne Cabet. (Chapter iv, p. 54.) Of or pertaining to Icaria in Attica. 5. Of or pertaining to Icaria (now Nikaria), in the Icarian sea.

I-ca'rĭ-an, n. 1. A follower of the communist Cabet, whose aims were put in practise experimentally in Texas in 1848, Illinois in 1850, Iowa in 1857, and California in 1881. 2. A native or inhabitant of Icaria. — I-ca'rĭ-an-ism, n. The system of communism promoted by Etienne Cabet. See social democracy.

I-ca'rĭ-an sea. A part of the Ægean sea, W. of Samos, in which, according to the legend, Icarus was drowned.

I-car'us-phĕre, 1 ĭ-kar'ŭs-fēr; 2 ĭ-car'us-fē, n. Gr. Myth. A king of Attica, who learned the cultivation of the vine from Dionysos. 2. The star Bootes or Arcturus. I-ca'rus†. 3. Gr. Myth. A Spartan, the father of Penelope.

Ic'a-rus†, 1 ik'ə-rus; 2 ic'a-rus. Gr. Myth. A son of Dædalus who, while flying with his father from Crete on wings fastened with wax, soared so high that the sun melted the wax, when he fell into the sea. [L., < Gr. Ikaros.]

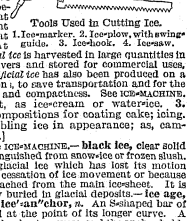
ice, 1 ĭs; 2 īc, v. I. t. [ICED; IC'ING.] 1. To freeze or chill with or as with ice; cover with ice; enclose or preserve in ice; refrigerate; as, to ice wines or tea.



And then a little hole, scarce opening in the walls we had made to admit the coffin, [we] left him in his narrow house.
KANE Arctic Explorations vol. i, p. 201. (c. a. d. 1857.)

2. To congeal into ice, or as into ice; cause to resemble ice; freeze; as, a horror that iced his blood. 3. To frost, as cake or nuts, with sugar or the like.

II. i. To be or become like ice.

And virtue withers where no love have perished;
BAILEY Festus, Home sc. 20.

ice, n. 1. Congealed or frozen water. It is brittle, transparent, and colorless. At atmospheric pressure fresh water congeals at 32° Fahr. (0° C.), salt water at 28° Fahr. (−2° C.). In freezing, water expands about 8.7 per cent., or nearly one eleventh, and as a consequence ice floats in water, with about one seventh of its bulk below the surface. The specific gravity of ice at the normal temperature of melting ice is 0.918, 1.0 being that of water at 4° C. At the present time ice is harvested in quantities in winter on lakes and rivers and stored for commercial uses, and very recently artificial ice has also been produced on a large scale at all seasons, and transported and used for the sake of greater purity and compactness. See ICE-MACHINE. 2. A frozen dessert, as ice-cream or water-ice. 3. Frosting or other compositions for coating cake; icing. 4. Something resembling ice in appearance; as, camphor-ice. [< AS. is.]

— artificial ice, see ICE-MACHINE. — black ice, clear solid crystalline ice, as distinguished from snow-ice or frozen slush. — dead ice [Geol.], stagnant ice which has lost its motion in consequence of the cessation of ice movement or because of having become detached from the main ice-sheet. It is often partly or wholly buried in glacial deposits. — ice age, see GLACIAL EPOCH. — ice'-an"chor, n. An S-shaped bar of round iron, sharpened at the point of its longer curve. A lawser is fastened to the shorter curve, and the anchor holds by the sharpened point being inserted in a hole made for the purpose or by catching in a crevice. — ice-apron, n. In bridge-building, a construction fitted onto the up-stream side of a pier-pointer, to protect it from being damaged by blocks of floating ice. — ice-auger, n. A large auger used for cutting holes in ice for fishing, etc., or for starting an ice-saw.

— ice-ax, n. An ax for cutting steps in ice, such as is used by climbers of the Alps. — ice-bag, n. Surg. A bag of rubber or the like for holding chopped ice as a cooling application. — ice-banner, n. [Western U. S.] An ice-feather. — ice-bar, n. Astron. A metal measuring-bar packed in ice and kept at 32° F.: used in geodetic surveying. — ice-bath, n. A flat-bottomed bath-tub having a cover, for preserving and Alpine Ice-ax.

Head and Spiked conveying ice. — ice-beam, n. A plank or beam for strengthening a vessel's bow in floating ice. — ice-bearer, n. A cryophorus. — ice-belt, n. See ICE-FOOT. — ice-bird, n. 1. An arctic sea-bird; specif., the dovekie. 2. The common Indian nightjar (Caprimulgus asiaticus).

Its usual note . . . is like the sound of a stone scudding over ice (hence it is sometimes called the Ice-bird).
T. C. JERDON Birds of India vol. i, p. 197. (Bos., 1877.)

— ice-blade, n. One of numerous flat crests and spires formed by the unequal melting of the surface of névé. — ice-blindness, n. Snow-blindness. — ice-blink, n. 1. A shining whiteness on the horizon produced by the reflection of distant masses of ice. 2. Same as ISBLINK. — ice-block, n. Geol. A part of a glacier which, through melting, has become separated from the main body of ice. — ice-bolt, n. 1. A sudden penetrating chill. 2. An avalanche. — ice-bone, n. The nitchebone. — ice-borne, a. Carried on the surface of the ice, as boulders transported during the Glacial period. — ice-boulder, n. A boulder transported and deposited through glacial action. — ice-bound, a. Surrounded, beset, or obstructed by ice; frozen in; as, an ice-bound ship; an ice-bound harbor. — ice-box, n. A small refrigerator. — ice brook, n. An ice-cold brook: used to indicate superior quality in speaking of the Spanish sherries which were tempered by plunging them while hot into the brook Salo, whose waters were icy cold.

SHAKESPEARE Othello v, 2, 253.

— ice-built, a. Composed or constructed of ice. — ice-cask, n. 1. Blacksmithing. A sharp projection from a horse's shoe, to prevent slipping. 2. An ice-creeper. — ice-calorimeter, n. See CALORIMETER. — ice-can, n. A narrow, deep receptacle in which distilled water is placed for conversion into artificial ice. — ice-canal, n. A boat having a broad flat keel shod with runners, for use both on open water and on ice. — ice-cap, n. 1. A permanent and continuous covering of ice or snow over a tract of land. 2. An ice-bag for the head. — ice-cascade, n. A steep declivity in a glacier. — ice-cave, n. A cave containing ice, especially when the ice remains through the year. — ice-chair, n. A chair mounted on ice-runners for passage on ice. — ice-chest, n. A refrigerator. — ice-chipper, n. An instrument resembling a chisel, used for cutting small fragments from blocks of ice. — ice-claw, n. Ice-tongs. — ice-cliff, n. An abrupt shore of arctic ice, more or less interstratified and covered by earth and vegetation, and sometimes entombing the frozen carcasses of prehistoric animals, as the Siberian mammoth. — ice-closet, n. A refrigerator in the form of a closet or small room. — ice-clothes, n. pl. Clothes suited to an arctic climate.

ice-cloud, n. A rime-cloud. — ice-cold, a. As cold as ice. — ice-columns, n. pl. A deposit of ice, especially in gravelly soil, in the form of vertical needles. — ice'craft', n. Expert knowledge in connection with exploration in polar or other ice regions. — ice-creeper, n. A prong or other roughened device attached to a boot or shoe to prevent the wearer from slipping on ice. — ice-crop, n. The harvest or yield of ice in a single winter or from a specified place. — ice-crusher, n. A mechanical device for pulverizing ice. — ice-cutter, n. A plane for shaving ice, as for use in iced drinks. — ice day (Meteor.), a day on which the temperature does not rise above the freezing-point. — ice-drift, n. A vein of accessory ice which forms in the crevices of glaciers. — ice-dock, n. A basin, either natural or cut with saws, in a field of ice, in which a vessel may lie to escape being crushed. — ice-drag, n. A type of ice-anchor used to aid in warping a vessel through ice-fields. — ice-drift, n. Loose floating ice. — ice-drops, n. pl. Bot. Icelesible processes. — ice-dump, n. The iron tank into which artificial ice-blocks are slid from the cans in which they are manufactured. See ICE-CAN. — ice-escape, n. An apparatus of poles and ropes for rescuing persons who have broken through the ice. — ice-fall, n. 1. The fall of ice detached from a glacial mass. 2. [Rare.] A glacier. 3. A point in the course of a glacier where the entire mass descends in steep and irregular masses. — ice-farm, n. A sheet of water, together with the necessary plant, buildings, etc., devoted to the cutting and storing of ice. — ice-feathers, n. pl. Feather-like crystals, forming occasionally on rocks, etc., at high elevations. — ice-fender, n. Any contrivance to fend off ice from a ship or a pier or other structure. — ice-fern, n. A formation of frost on windowglass. — ice-field, n. A large body of floating ice. — ice-float; ice-floe; — ice'fish", n. 1. The caplin. 2. Any of the Salangidæ. — ice-fishing, n. The act or sport of fishing with nets or lines through holes cut in the ice. — ice-flower, n. 1. A star-shaped crystal embedded in a mass of ice. In a common laboratory experiment the ice-flowers are made visible by gentle heating. 2. Ice-foot. — ice-fog, n. Fog over fields of ice. — ice-foot, n. A wall of ice formed by sea-water and snow frozen along the shore in polar regions. Ice-belt†.

As an extra precaution, I had the Eskimos with axes bevel off the edge of the ice-foot abreast of the ship, to facilitate her rising if she should be squeezed by the heavy floes outside.

— ice-fork, n. A long-handled three-tined fork for chopping ice into pieces. — ice-fox, n. The arctic fox. — ice-free, a. Never frozen over. — ice-glass, n. Crackle-glass. — ice-glazed, a. Incrusted with ice. — ice-gorge, n. [U. S.] A mass of broken ice clogging the bed of a river. — ice-guard, n. A slanting wall of heavy timbers placed in front of boom-piles to prevent the destruction of the boom by ice. — ice-gull, n. A large gull (Larus glaucus) of arctic regions. — ice-gush, n. The rush of melting water in the bottom of a glacial crevasse. — ice-hill, n. 1. An iceberg. 2. A hummock or pile of ice on an ice-field. 3. A natural or artificial slope of frozen snow or ice used for coasting or tobogganing. — ice-hockey, n. A game similar to field-hockey, but played by skaters on the ice. — ice-hook, n. 1. A hook attached to a pole: used in handling large blocks of ice. 2. A toothed implement for anchoring. — ice-house, n. 1. A building, padded with sawdust or the like, for storing ice: often a mere ice-pit roofed over. 2. An ice-hut. — ice-hut, n. An igloo. See plate of ARCHITECTURE, fig. 12. — ice-jam, n. The obstruction to the flow of a river caused by blocks of ice which, instead of floating with the current, are piled one on top of the other. — ice-ladder, n. Same as ICE-ESCAPE. — ice-lance, n. A lane of smooth ice between hummocks. Compare HUMMOCK, n., 2. — ice-lead, n. A temporary channel running through an ice-field. These channels are a menace to the arctic navigator on account of their liability to be closed up at any time by the motion of the ice.

—ice'leaf", n. Bot. A woolly weed of the figwort family; mullen: a local name.— ice-ledge, n. See ICE-FOOT.— ice-leveler, n. A device for smoothing the ice on a pond and scraping off the snow.— ice-line, n. Physics. A curve whose coordinates represent respectively pressures and temperatures at which a mixture of ice and water will be in stable equilibrium.— ice-lobe, n. The convex front of an ice-field caused by the sides having moved over higher ground than the center.— ice-locomotive(ce), n. A locomotive having pointed projections on its driving-wheels to enable it to travel on smooth level ice.— ice-loon, n. The great northern diver.— ice-machine, n. An apparatus for making ice by artificial means, as by absorption of latent heat from compounds that liquefy or evaporate rapidly, or by the expansion of a compressed fluid, such as air or ammonia.— ice-mark, n. Geol. Any mark or indication left by moving ice or glacial action.— ice-marker, n. A sled-shaped or plow-shaped device for marking the line where blocks are to be cut.— ice-master, n. Naut. A man skilled in piloting vessels among ice-floes, or in extricating ice-bound ships. 2. One who looks after a public skating-pond.— ice-meer, n. [Local, Eng.] A block of anchor-ice that rises to the surface.— ice-mill, n. The place where a glacier abrades and grinds rock through the action of rubble.— ice-mountain, n. An iceberg.— ice-needles, n. pl. Ice-columns.— ice-nip, n. The pressure exerted by ice upon a ship which is caught between ice-floes.— ice-pack, n. A broken field of floating ice jammed together.— ice-pall, n. A pall or vessel partly filled with ice, as for cooling bottles of wine.— ice-pan, n. See ICE-FIELD.— ice-pick, n. See ice-cake-like sheets of floating ice.— ice-paper, n. Thin gelatin sheets, used in trausferring or tracing.— ice-pea (ēz), n. The cladius (Cladius grandis).— ice-petrel, n. An antarctic shearwater (Priofinus cinereus).— ice-pick, n. A small pick having a wooden handle, used in breaking ice for domestic use.— ice-pigeon, n. A small domestic pigeon, whose plumage is light-blue, somewhat the color of ice.— ice-pillar, n. A pedestal of ice on a glacier, supporting a broader block of stone, which has protected the ice beneath it from solar heat.— ice-pilot, n. Same as ICE-MASTER, 1.— ice-pit, n. A place below ground arranged for ice-storage.— ice-pitcher, n. A covered pitcher for holding ice-water.— ice-plane, n. 1. A cutter for shaving ice. 2. An ice-leveler. 3. A tool for scraping snow from blocks of ice.— ice-plow, n. A plow-like tool used in ice-harvesting, arranged with shares that score the ice.— ice-point, n. The temperature at which ice melts.— ice-poultice, n. Surg. A bladder or other water-proof bag filled with cracked ice; an ice-bag.— ice-prow, n. An ice-ram.— ice-pulse, n. The vibration that occurs before an ice-quake.— ice-pyramid, n. A mound of ice on a glacier, having a stone or earthy débris lying across its foot.— ice-quake", n. The disturbance attending the rupture of masses of ice.— ice-ram, n. A solid pointed projection from a ship's prow to enable it to force a passage through ice.— ice-river, n. A glacier.— ice-rock, n. 1. A rock-like block of ice; an iceberg. 2. A rock covered with ice.— ice-sails, n. Same as ICE-YACHT.— ice-saw, n. A saw with a long handle for use with both hands: used in ice cutting.— ice-scooter, n. Same as SCOOTER, 3.— ice-scouring, n. A condition resulting from the movement of glaciers down mountain slopes and causing the scoring and smoothing of the land and rocks.— ice-scraper, n. 1. Any implement for scraping snow from ice before harvesting. 2. Sealskaws fastened to a sled-runner, used by Eskimos in hunting seals.— ice-screw, n. A form of ice-elevator.— ice-shed, n. A point at which glacier-ice divides before parting in opposite directions.— ice-sheet, n. Same as GLACIER. 3. An ice-cap.— ice-ship, n. A ship adapted for cruising among ice-floes.— ice-sky, n. Meteor. A sky that appears to scintillate with the reflection of curved forms from a field of ice.— ice-spade, n. A tool resembling a spade, but having a wedge instead of a blade, for separating blocks of ice already partly divided by an ice-plow.— ice-spar, n. A vitreous orthoclase.— ice-spur, n. Same as CHEVRON, 6 (2).— ice-storm, n. A rain-storm occurring when the earth and the objects on it are below the freezing-point, so that they become incrusted with ice.— ice-table, n. Same as CHEVRON, 6 (2).— ice-storm, n. A rain-storm occurring when the earth and the objects on it are below the freezing-point, so that they become incrusted with ice.— ice-table, n. Same as ICE-FOOT, 1.— ice-tongs, n. pl. Large curved tongs for handling blocks of ice. 2. Small tongs for the use of ice at table.— ice-tongue, n. A steep, narrow cliff of ice, rising high above glacial névé, and extending upward toward the higher mountain-peaks.— ice-trough, n. Same as ICE-FOOT.— ice-wall, n. Same as ICE-FOOT.— ice-water, n. 1. Water chilled by ice. 2. Melted ice.— ice-whale, n. The Greenland right whale.— ice-work, n. Same as ICE-FEATURES.— ice-worn, a. Abraded by ice; specif., rubbed, scratched, or channeled by glacial action.— ice-yacht, n. Same as ICE-BOAT, 1.— ice-yachting, n. Same as ICE-BOATING.— Iceland ice, same as ICE-CAP.— Neapolitan ice, ice-cream composed of several layers of various flavors.— sailing ice, floating ice that has been scattered in fragments by the wind from the pack.— sheet ice, the sheet of water by which the cold air above it. Scoresby and Dr. Kane estimated that the greatest thickness of sheet ice in the arctic regions could not be over 10 feet, and that greater thickness must be due to the superposition of two layers.— sludgeice, soft ice first formed by the action of the cold upon the ocean.— stone ice, dead ice.— to break the ice, to BREAK.— winter ice, the ice that never disappears around the pole.— young ice, in the polar regions, ice of the present season, as distinguished from ice formed in previous years.

Many self-explaining compound words have ice as the first element; as, ice-cutting, ice-factory, ice-making, -ice, suffix. Same as -ISS, 1.

I. C. E., abbr. Institute of Civil Engineers.

ice., icel., abbr. Iceland; Icelandic.

ice'berg", 1 ais'bʉrg"; 2 īç'bĕrg", n. A thick mass of ice, usually found floating in the sea in high latitudes, but rarely lower than 40° N. and 35° S. latitude. An iceberg is generally part of a glacier discharged into the sea, the ice being forced into the water until, by reason of its weight, the force of the waves, or the buoyancy of the water, the seaward end breaks off. By reason of its unequal melting and consequent unstable equilibrium, fractures are frequent, and icebergs often assume fantastic forms, as of peaks, towers, and arches. Only about one-twelfth of the mass is visible above the surface of the sea.

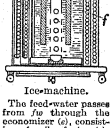
The structure of the iceberg varies with its origin and is always that of the glacier from which it was broken. . . . The constantly renewed material from which the icebergs are formed is brought down by the motion of the glacier.

Encyc. Brit. 11th ed., vol. xv. p. 227.

[< Sw. isberg, < is, ice, + berg, hill.]— iceberg theory, the theory that the continental phenomena of glaciation, such as rock-planing and -scoring, and boulder-heaps, are mainly due to the action of floating ice-masses. See GLACIER.



Ice-machine.

This feed-water passes from fw through the economizer (e), consisting of coils of pipe (c), and thence to the central vessel (f), where it receives a chemical salt fed from s, it produces intense cold, freezing the water in the ice-cans (ic). The waste brine overflows into the economizer, chilling the entering feed-water, and passes thence by ev to the evaporators, where the salt is regained.

ice'blink", n. A white glare on the sky, caused by the reflection of light from ice.— ice'bird", etc. See under ICE, n.

ice'-boat", 1 ais'-bōt"; 2 īç'-bōt", n. 1. A framework of wood and iron, of various forms, with mast, sails, and skate-like runners, for sailing over ice.

American Ice-boat.

In the United States the framework is usually in the form of a Roman cross, the transverse bar of which is supported at its extremities on skates or iron runners, while the long arm rests on a similar runner, pivoted and serving as a rudder. A railed platform at the stern accommodates the crew. Such boats are usually sloop-rigged, and attain great speed.

2. A specially constructed steamboat, having a strong prow or beak and powerful engines, used to break up ice in navigable channels. 3. Any boat used in transporting ice.

ice'-breaker, 1 ais'-brēk"er; 2 īç'-brēk"er, n. 1. A structure of masonry, planking, or piling, so placed as to break up and deflect floating ice, that would otherwise injure bridges, piers, shipping, etc. 2. Same as ICE-BOAT, 2. See illus. below. 3. A small domestic hand-tool used for cracking ice. 4. The bowhead, or great polar whale (Balæna mysticetus): a whalers' name.

ice'cream', 1 ais'-krīm'; 2 īç'-krēm', n. Cream, milk, or custard sweetened and flavored, and frozen by a freezing-mixture, being usually agitated by a dasher in the process, to make it of uniform consistency.— Neapolitan ice-cream, same as NEAPOLITAN ICE. See under ICE.

Ice-lan'dic, n. The language of Iceland; Old Norse. Ice'land-ite, n. One of the Scandinavian settlements in Britain. His former name was Dönsk Tunga (the Danish tongue) or Norræna (Norse, Norwegian, Old Norse), and it is the oldest and least changed of the Scandinavian or German branch of the Teutonic family, being closely akin both to Anglo-Saxon and to High German. The Norwegians brought the language to Iceland, and emigrated thither in the 9th and the following centuries, and a remarkable literature of poetical folklore sprang up there in the 12th and 13th centuries, which is easily read by the modern Icelander. See EDDA and SAGA. After the advent of Christianity (A. D. 1000), poetry continued in the old forms, but the content took chiefly religious. Bishop Thorlak Skulsson's translation of the New Testament in the 16th century, modern Icelandic is based, utilizing the Latin characters for the basis of the alphabet, but retaining the old thorn (Þ), the initial i with j, u with v, and numerous umlaut changes.

The Icelandic contains the key to many a riddle in the English language, and to many a mystery in the English character.

Other words beginning with this prefix will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.

I'co-sa-hē'dron, 1 ai'ko-sa-hi'dron; 2 ī'co-sa-hē'dron, n. A solid bounded by 20 plane faces. [< Gr. eikosaedron, < eikosi, twenty, + hedra, seat, < hezomai, sit.] I'co-si-hē'dron:—great icosahedron, a symmetrical polyhedron having 20 faces, 12 vertices, and 30 edges — regular i., one of the five regular solids bounded by 20 equilateral triangles.— truncated i., a solid formed by so cutting off the vertices of the regular icosahedron that original faces are reduced to regular hexagons.—I'co-sa-he'dral, I'co-si-he'dral, a. —icosahedral functions, algebraic functions distinguished by finite polyhedral groups of substitutions.—group, a group representing the rotations by which a regular icosahedron can be carried out of its form and back again. It consists of 60 even permutations of 5 elements.

I'co-san'der, n. Bot. A plant of the class Icosandria.—I'co-san'dri-a, n. pl. Bot. The 12th class in the Linnean artificial system of plants, embracing those with 20 or more unconnected stamens inserted on the calyx.—I'co-san'drous, I'co-san'dral-an, a. Having 20 or more perigynous stamens.—I'co-sane, n. Chem. An organic crystalline compound ($C_{20}H_{42}$) derived variously, as by fractionating paraffin from brown coal.—I'co-sa-se'mic, a. Pros. Containing twenty metrical time, semeia, or normal shorts. See SEMEION; Icosandrous Flower

SEMIC.—I-co'si-an, a. Of or pertaining to the number twenty.—I-co'si-ca, n. A liquid hydrocarbon, $C_{20}H_{40}$, contained in ozocerite. [< Gr. eikosi, twenty.]

I'co-si-do'dec-a-he'dron, 1 ci'ko-si-do'dek-a-hi'dron; 2 ī'co-si-dō'dĕc-a-hē'dron, n. Geom. A solid bounded by 20 triangles and 12 pentagons, formed by cutting down the vertices of the regular icosahedron until the original edges are obliterated. [< Gr. eikosi, twenty, + dōdeka (see DODECA-) + hedra, base, < hezomai, sit.]

I-cos'i-tene, 1 ai-kos'i-tēn; 2 ī-cŏs'i-tēn, n. A liquid hydrocarbon ($C_{20}H_{38}$) contained in ozocerite. [< Gr. eikosi, twenty.]

I'co-si-tet'ra-he'droid, 1 ai'ko-si-tet'ra-hi'droid; 2 ī'co-si-tĕt'ra-hē'droid, n. A solid bounded by 24 isosceles triangles.—I'co-si-tet'ra-he'dron, 1 ai'ko-si-tet'ra-hi'dron; 2 ī'co-si-tĕt'ra-hē'dron, n. Crystal. An isometric holohedron included under 24 planes, each of equal three-sided faces: a trapezohedron; a tetragonal trisoctahedron. [< Gr. eikosi, twenty, + tettares, four, + hedra, base, < hezomai, sit.]

I'co-tet'ra-hē, 1 ai'kos-tet'i-hi; 2 ī'cŏs-tĕt'i-hē, n. pl. Ich. A family of scombroidean fishes, especially those with a flaccid skin, unarmed opercular bones, and thoracic ventral fins: including many species found off the coasts of California. [< I-cos'te-us, n. (t. g.). [< Gr. eikō, give way, + osteon, bone.]—i-cos'tic-id, n.—I-cos'te-line, a. & n.—I-cos'te-oid, a. & n.

i-cos'te-ous, a. Pertaining to, or having the nature of, the ribs.

i-cos'ti-form, a. Like a rib.

i-cos'ti-nate, a. Having the ribs prominent.

i-cos'tu-lus, n. A small rib.

I-cot'e-ra, n. pl. Ich. A family of scombroidean fishes, especially those with a flaccid skin, unarmed opercular bones, and thoracic ventral fins: including many species found off the coasts of California. Same as ICOSTETRAHEDRON.

I'co-tet'ra-he'dral, 1 ai'ko-si-tet'ra-hi'dral; 2 ī'co-si-tĕt'ra-hē'dral, a. Of, pertaining to, or having the form of, an icositetrahedron.

I'co-si-tet'ra-he'dron, 1 ai'ko-si-tet'ra-hi'dron; 2 ī'co-si-tĕt'ra-hē'dron, n. Crystal. An isometric holohedron included under 24 planes, each of equal three-sided faces: a trapezohedron; a tetragonal trisoctahedron. [< Gr. eikosi, twenty, + tettares, four, + hedra, base, < hezomai, sit.]

I'cos-te'i-dæ, 1 ai'kos-ti'i-di; 2 ī'cŏs-tē'i-dē, n. pl. Ich. A family of scombroidean fishes, especially those with a flaccid skin, unarmed opercular bones, and thoracic ventral fins: including many species found off the coasts of California. Same as ICOSTETRAHEDRON.

I-cos'te-us, 1 ai-kos'ti-us; 2 ī-cŏs'tē-us, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. eikō, give way, + osteon, bone.]—i-cos'tic-id, n.—I-cos'te-line, a. & n.—I-cos'te-oid, a. & n.

i-cos'te-ous, a. Pertaining to, or having the nature of, the ribs.

i-cos'ti-form, a. Like a rib.

i-cos'ti-nate, a. Having the ribs prominent.

i-cos'tu-lus, n. A small rib.

I-cot'e-ra, n. pl. Ich. A family of scombroidean fishes, especially those with a flaccid skin, unarmed opercular bones, and thoracic ventral fins: including many species found off the coasts of California. [< Gr. ikos, a rib, + -ōtēs, bone.]—i-cos'te-id, n.—i-cos'te-ine, a. & n.—i-cos'te-oid, a. & n.

I-cos'te-us, 1 ai-kos'ti-us; 2 ī-cŏs'tē-us, n. pl. Ich. A family of scombroidean fishes, especially those with a flaccid skin, unarmed opercular bones, and thoracic ventral fins: including many species found off the coasts of California. [< Gr. ikos, a rib, + -ōtēs, bone.]—i-cos'te-id, n.—i-cos'te-ine, a. & n.—i-cos'te-oid, a. & n.

I'cos-te'i-dæ, 1 ai'kos-ti'i-di; 2 ī'cŏs-tē'i-dē, n. pl. Ich. A family of scombroidean fishes, especially those with a flaccid skin, unarmed opercular bones, and thoracic ventral fins: including many species found off the coasts of California. Same as ICOSTEIDÆ.

I'cos-te'us, 1 ai'kos-ti'us; 2 ī'cŏs-tē'us, n. [IC'TUS-ES or (L.) IC'TUS, pl.] 1. Med. A stroke or blow. Specif.: (1) The pulsation of an artery. (2) A sudden attack or fit. (3) The sting of a scorpion. 2. Class. Pros. A stress of voice or rhythmic accent that distinguishes one part of a metrical foot from another. The ictus is usually marked in rhythmic schemes by a mark (′), and is classically most commonly fell on a long syllable. It had nothing to do with written accent. See ARSIS.

The names thesis and arsis came from the practice of marching or of beating time with the foot. The Greeks used them (thus) . . . In modern usage (which follows later Roman writers) they are commonly, but perversely, interchanged; arsis being used for the stress-part, and thesis for the other. HADLEY AND ALLEN Greek Grammar, Versification app., p. 336. [A. D. CO. 1884.]

The syllable on which the emphasis falls is called the Arsis. The Arsis is often called the metrical ictus, or merely the ictus. KITCHEN Gr. Gram. tr. by Edwards and Taylor, § 349, p. 574. [A. 1853.]

3. In modern verse, a metrical stress or accent falling on a word or syllable; a verse-accent, asin "There liv-ed'a sing'er in France' of old' by the tide'less dol'orous, mid'land sea'." See illus. under BUFFALO-FISH. Ic-ti'o-bus, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. ichthys, fish, + bous, ox.]—Ic-ti'o-bin(e), n. & a.

Ic'tis-i-dæ, n. pl. Same as HISTIOPHORIDÆ, etc.

Ic'tus, 1 ik'tus; 2 ĭc'tŭs, n. [IC'TUS-ES or (L.) IC'TUS, pl.] 1. Med. A stroke or blow. Specif.: (1) The pulsation of an artery. (2) A sudden attack or fit. (3) The sting of a scorpion. 2. Class. Pros. A stress of voice or rhythmic accent that distinguishes one part of a metrical foot from another. The ictus is usually marked in rhythmic schemes by a mark (′), and is classically most commonly fell on a long syllable. It had nothing to do with written accent. See ARSIS.

The names thesis and arsis came from the practice of marching or of beating time with the foot. The Greeks used them (thus) . . . In modern usage (which follows later Roman writers) they are commonly, but perversely, interchanged; arsis being used for the stress-part, and thesis for the other. HADLEY AND ALLEN Greek Grammar, Versification app., p. 336. [A. D. CO. 1884.]

The syllable on which the emphasis falls is called the Arsis. The Arsis is often called the metrical ictus, or merely the ictus. KITCHEN Gr. Gram. tr. by Edwards and Taylor, § 349, p. 574. [A. 1853.]

3. In modern verse, a metrical stress or accent falling on a word or syllable; a verse-accent, asin "There liv-ed'a sing'er in France' of old' by the tide'less dol'orous, mid'land sea'." [L., < ictus, pp. of ico, strike.] —ictus cordis, the impulse of the heart against the chest-wall; the heart-beat.—I. sanguinis, apoplexy.—I. solis, sunstroke.

I'-C'. U., abbr. Naut. International code used.

I'cu-les'ma, n. Same as INCULISMA.

I-cu'thi-ci, 1 i-kiū'thi-ci; 2 i-cū'thi-ci, n. Bib. (Douai).

I'cu-tu, 1 i-kū'tu; 2 i-cū'tu, n. A mountain in S. central Venezuela; height, 10,000 ft.

Ic'y, 1 ai'si; 2 īc'y, a. [IC'I-ER; IC'I-EST.] 1. Of, pertaining to, resembling, abounding in, or covered with ice; frozen; frigid.

Geology shows the old drift-gravels to belong to times when the glacial or icy period with its arctic climate was passing, or had passed away, in Europe. TYLOR Anthropol. ch. 1, p. 30. [A. 1881.] 2. Hence, figuratively, unfeeling; coldness of manner, aspect, etc.; chilling; frigid; as, an icy reception.

Ic'y Strait. A strait in Alaska between Chatham Strait and the Pacific ocean.

Id, 1, id; 2 īd, n. A small European cyprinoid fish (Leuciscus idus), of which the orf is a domesticated variety. ide.

Id, n. Biol. In Weismann's theory of heredity, a unit of germplasm; an ideoplasm representing the personality of an ancestral member of the species. The ids are supposedly composed of determinants, which are made up of biophores. [G., < Gr. idios, own.]

-id, suffix. Formerly -ide, used: (1) In adjectives of Latin origin, as in fluid, solid. (2) In nouns derived from the Greek or from Greek models through Latin or New Latin feminine nouns in -is, as carotid. (3) In zoology: (a) In nouns derived from Latin or New Latin nouns in -ides (pl. of -idēs), as falconid; (b) in nouns designating the cusps, crests, etc., of the lower molar teeth, which are as differentiated from those of the upper teeth, hypocone, etc. (4) In chemistry, to form names of compounds. It is often added to the name of the contracted form or to the name of existing negative element or radical in binary compounds; as, sodium chlor*id*.

-id, suffix. 1. Astron. A termination added to the name of a constellation to form the name of a meteor radiating or seeming to radiate, from that assemblage of stars; as, Leonid. 2. In literature, a termination added to names of epic or mock-heroic poems; as, Æneid. [< L. -is, pl. -ides, < Gr. -is, pl. -ides, patronymic suffix.]

I'd, 1, id; 2 īd. A contraction of (1) I would; (2) I had.

Id., abbr. Idem (the same).

I'da', 1, id'ə; 2 īd'a, n. Theos. One of the three supersensitive currents in man (the others being pingala and sushumna) which are essential to life existence. They play up and down the spinal column in the astral body.

I'da, 1 ai'də; 2 īd'a, n. 1. A feminine personal name: from the Teutonic, and meaning "happy." 2. An Anglian chief (–560), who founded the kingdom of Bernicia. 3. A mountain range in Mysia, Asia Minor; scene of the rape of Ganymede and judgment of Paris, and of the cult of Cybele. 4. An ancient mountain in Crete celebrated for the worship of Zeus and Rhea: now Psiloriti. 5. A county in W. Iowa; 432 sq. m.: county-seat, Ida Grove.

-i'da, suffix. In zoology, used to form names of groups of various rank mostly larger than the family. [NL. = L. -idæ; see -IDÆ.]

D. A. [L.], abbr. Immortalis Dei Auspicio, or Auxilio (with the guidance or aid of the eternal God).

Ida., abbr. Idaho.

I-daa'der-a-ded, 1 i-dār'dər-a-dĕd; 2 ī-dār'dĕr-a-dĕd, n. A town and commune in Friesland, Netherlands.

i-dæ, suffix. 1. Denoting descent from or kinship with: in words derived from the Greek; as, *Atrid*æ. 2. Zool. Used to form the names of families of animals added to the stem of the name of the type genus; as, *Cavid*æ, Cerambyc*id*æ, etc. [Pl. of L. -ides, < G. -idēs, patronymic suffix.]

I'da'an, 1 ai-di'ən; 2 ī-dā'ăn, n. Of or pertaining to Mount Ida near Troy or to Mount Ida in Crete.

—Idæan mother, the goddess Cybele, who had a sanctuary on the Phrygian Ida; also, Rhea, with whom she was supposed to haunt the wooded uplands of Mount Ida in Crete, accompanied by the I. Dactyli, or trains of Corybantic attendants, singing and dancing. The latter are also associated with Ida in Phrygia and the worship of Cybele, the two goddesses being frequently confounded. See CYBELE; RHEA.

I'da Grove. A town, county-seat of Ida county, Ia.

I'da-ho, 1 ai'də-hō; 2 īda-hō, n. 1. A State in the N. W. United States; 83,354 sq. m.; capital, Boise. 2. A county in Idaho; 1,074 sq. m.; county-seat, Mount Idaho.

I'da-ho Falls. A city in Bingham county, Ida.

I'da-ho Springs. A town in Clear county, Colo.

I-da'lia, 1 ai-dā'li-ə; 2 ī-dā'lĭ-a, n. Myth. A name of Aphrodite (Venus): from Idalium, a town in Cyprus, where she was worshiped.

I-da'li-um, 1 ai-dē'li-um; 2 ī-dā'lĭ-um, n. An ancient town in Cyprus. I-da'li-an, a.

I'dant, 1 ai'dənt; 2 īdant, n. Biol. In Weismann's theory of heredity, one of the rod-like granular masses of chromatin in the nucleus of reproductive cells, considered as being an aggregation of ids. See id, n.

I'das, 1 ai'dəs; 2 ī'das, n. Gr. Myth. A hero, a light-god, who abducted the nymph Marpessa, wooed by Apollo. A struggle over the maid was ended by Zeus, who allowed Marpessa her choice, and she, fearing desertion by Apollo, gave Idas her hand. Idas participated in the Argonautic expedition and the Calydonian hunt. Idas and Lynceus, the cousins of Castor and Pollux, Lynceus and Castor were killed and Idas was slain by Zeus, after he had wounded Pollux.

I'das-void, 1 ai'das-vōid; 2 ī'das-vōid, n. Norse Myth. The plains of Ida, where Asgard first stood, and where the gods assemble after Ragnarok. I'da-vollr‡.

I'da-ho, abbr. [S. AFR.] Short-dated diamond buying. See ILLICIT.

Id'bal, 1, id'bash; 2 īd'bash, pron. Bib. I Chron. iv. 3.

Id'des-leigh, 1 id'es-li; 2 īd'ĕs-lē, Earl of (1721815–1887). Stafford H. Northcote, an English statesman; commissioner for Alabama claims, and Conservative leader.

Id'dings-lite, 1 id'inz-ait; 2 īd'ingz-īt, n. Mineral. An alteration product of olivine, found in certain igneous rocks. [Jos. P. Iddings, American mineralogist.]

Id'do, 1 id'o; 2 īd'o, n. Bib. 2 Chron. ix, 29.

Ide', 1, id; 2 īd, n. A cyprinoid fish (Leuciscus idus) found in the waters of northern Europe and introduced into the United States. [< Sp. ide, < L. idus, carp.]

Ide', 1, id; 2 īd, Henry Clay (1841844–1921). An American jurist; governor-general of Philippine Islands 1905–1906.

-ide, suffix. See -id, suffix (4).

I-de'a, n. & a. [Rare.] 1. To give a certain definite form or character to. 2. To form ideas or conceptions.

I-de'a, 1, ai-di'ə; 2 ī-dē'a, n. 1. Any mental image or product of mental activity regarded as a copy or representative of some really existing thing or condition; an object of mental apprehension in the widest sense.

The word idea, . . . I think, serves best to stand for whatsoever the object of the understanding when a man thinks. I have used it to express whatever is meant by phantasm, notion, species, or whatever it is which the mind can be employed about in thinking.

LOCKE Essays, Human Understanding bk. i. ch. 1. p. 28. [n. s.]

2. A conception or notion in the stricter sense, but more or less fanciful, imperfect, or vague, accompanied by a belief; a supposition or impression; as, he conceived the idea that his children hated him; I have an idea that it can be done. 3. Any conception regarded as inducing or controlling action; a mental picture of something desired, purposed, or planned; a project; a contemplated performance or procedure; as, he went to London with the view of going into a business there.

KING Richard . . . was a strong, restless, burly man, with one idea always in his head, and that the very troublesome idea of breaking the heads of other men.

DICKENS Child's Hist. Eng. ch. 13. p. 110. [c. & H.]

4. A conception of that which has value; a mental picture of something excellent; ideal; especially, a conception of or belief in some standard of beauty or morals to be realized in conduct; as, the Greek idea of beauty; the American idea of government.

It is in formative ideas—those which are not mere images or transcripts, but types or ideals—that we must look for the chief impelling powers of history.

ROBERT FLINT Philos. of History bk. ii, p. 583. [w. & s. 1874.]

We may die, but the idea lives forever.

KINGSLEY Alton Locke p. 403. [MACM. 1877.]

5. A mental image, picture, or representative of a sensible object, especially an object of sight; hence, the mental representation or symbol of any spiritual and unpicturable object; as, an idea of a house; an idea of hope; an idea of causation or being. 6. Philos. (1) In Platonic thought, the true archetype or perfect immaterial pattern, of which all visible things are but imperfect copies. Such an idea had the significance of an eternal and divine existence.

The more probable view, Parmenides, of these ideas is that they are patterns fixed in nature, and that other things are like them.

PLATO Parmenides (Jowett's tr.) III, 249.

Aristotle confined the word idea to the conception of the species, which was immanent, however, only in the individual. (2) In the Cartesian and Scottish schools, any immediate object of cognition, regarded on the one hand as being present in consciousness, and on the other as in some sort a representative and revelation of this objective original, a more or less exact mental representative of reality, rather than a product of abstract thinking. (3) In the sensational scheme of Hume and his followers, a mental image, and therefore less and more schematized mental representative of a sensuous impression, all the contents of consciousness being divided into these two classes. Apart from these pretty vague notions of impressions, the really abstract thinking or conceptual knowledge was held to be possible.

It is imperative to note the distinction between the use which Hume makes and that which Locke and Berkley make of the word idea. To the latter the word stands for any fact of consciousness or psychic phenomenon as object of knowledge—for percept, image or emotion. Hume . . . employs the term perception in this general sense and uses idea to designate one class of perceptions, the less vivid.

CALKINS Persistent Problems of Philosophy p. 151. [MACM. '10.]

(4) In the Kantian and transcendental schools, one of those transcendental conceptions, or ideals, of pure reason, the verification of which transcend the powers of human knowledge, but which set the goal of reflection and worthily determined the conduct. Such were the ideas of God, Freedom, and Immortality.

Following the Kantian impulse the philosophy of Continental Europe and Great Britain developed systems of idealism which, in this respect like Platonism, gave an unquestioned authority and supreme value to the ideas of value, or ideals, of human thought and conduct.

(5) In Hegelianism, the highest and completest reality, or spiritual self-activity fully realized: a return to the Platonic conception. See IDEAL, 3, below.

The doctrine of conception treats of the subjective conception . . . of the objective . . . under which Hegel comprehends mechanism, chemism, and teleology; and of the idea, which dialectically unfolds itself as life, cognition, and absolute Idea.

UEBERWEG History of Philosophy. [s. 1874.]

7. Mus. The subject or theme which is the groundwork of the various parts of a musical composition. 8†. The embodiment of a conception; also, the quintessential quality of a person or thing considered as derived from some source and typical of that source. [L., < Gr. idea, form, < idein, see.]

Syn.: apprehension, archetype, belief, conceit, concept, conception, design, fancy, ideal, image, imagination, impression, judgment, model, notion, perception, pattern, plan, purpose, sentiment, supposition, theory, thought. An idea is, etymologically, an image. The Platonic meaning of a perfect archetype has nearly disappeared from the word idea, and has been largely appropriated by ideal, the something of the original meaning still appears when in theological or philosophical language we speak of the ideas of God. The present popular use has the same relation to the primitive sense at but a single point—that an idea is mental as opposed to anything substantial or physical; thus, almost any mental product may be called an idea. See CONCEPTION; FANCY; IDEAL; THOUGHT.—Ant.: actuality, fact, reality, substance.—absolute idea. 1. In the Platonic sense, the idea considered as the archetype of all individual existences. 2. In the Hegelian sense, the idea as the goal and law of all development.—abstract i. (Psychol.), the schematic mental representation of quality, or combination of qualities, or relation. Usually, less sensuous than the after-image, or concrete memory image, but less abstract than the conception. Often, also, a conception or general notion.—adequate i. (Philos.), according to Spinoza, an idea possessing all the inherent signs of a true idea. 2. As used by Locke, an idea accurately typifying the archetype from which it was derived and by which it is derived. 3. According to Hume, an idea arising, as a species of reproduction, from a sense-impression.—architectonic i., a plan or outline according to which some science or art or important work is developed and constructed.—extensive i., a temporal or spatial idea of which the components are arranged in a regular and fixed order opposed to intensive idea.—fixed i. (Psychol.), an idea that, for a long time or permanently, dominates consciousness: a notion that has reached a point beyond control or inhibition; specif., the delusions in some forms of insanity.—dominant i.—focal i. (Psychol.), a vivid or clearly defined perception which is the resultant of concentrated or undivided attention: distinguished from marginal idea or sensation.—free i. (Psychol.), an idea considered apart from the concrete sensuous impressions or impulses with which it was primarily associated.—general i., a general concept. See under CONCEPT.—imperative i., same as FIXED IDEA.—implicit i. (Psychol.), the elements of ideation which implicitly connect with the consciousness in every act of cognition.—innate i. (Philos. 1. An idea or belief not derived from experience, but native to the mind, so that in connection with occasions it springs up either immediately or intuitively. 2. The Platonic idea. See IDEA, 6 (1).—insistent i., same as FIXED IDEA.—intensive i., a combination of sensational elements in which the order of their arrangement is not fixed.—marginal i. (Psychol.), a mental image existing at the so-called margin or fringe of consciousness, and therefore vague and indistinct: opposed to focal idea, which is clearly distinct and clear.—musical i., any musical form conveying a definite conception, as a theme, phrase, or figure; specif., one in a conceived but inchoate condition, before being worked out as a finished composition.—Platonic i., same as IDEA, 6 (1).—secondary i. (Psychol.), an idea which recurs because of unconscious association with another idea; a dependent idea.—the bare i., the mere suggestion, hint, intimation, etc., of a thing: as, he was shocked at the bare idea of the action.—the i.! (Colloq.), a cleverly expressing indignation, surprise, contempt, deprecation, etc.—i-de'aed, a. Having ideas.—i'de-ag'e-nous, a. Producing ideas.—i-de'a-less, a.

i-de'al, 1 ai-dē'al; 2 ĭ-dē'al, a. Consisting of, pertaining to, existing as characterized by, or existing in ideas; conceptional; mental; of or pertaining to an ideal or the ideal; ideational.

The imagination is the ideal faculty, that which perceives ideals, and helps us to realise them.

J. F. CLARKE Self-Culture p. 175. [o. & co. 1880.]

Any work of art which represents . . . the mental conception of a material object, is in the primary sense of the word ideal.

RUSKIN in True and Beautiful, Ideal p. 34. [w. & s. 1870.]

2. Conceived as perfect, supremely excellent, or very desirable; as, a perfect friend; an ideal home.

Prometheus: The ideal beauty
Which the creative faculty of mind Fashioned and follow'd in a thousand shapes
More lovely than the real.

LONGFELLOW Masque of Pandora pt. iii.

3. Existing only in imagination, fancy, or idea; of such perfection as to be practically unattainable; visionary; fanciful; imaginary: opposed to real; as, an ideal commonwealth; ideal happiness.

Ideal peace, like ideal liberty, could ne'er bestow.

CAMPBELL Pleasures of Hope pt. i, st. 27.

4. Art. Exceeding ordinary reality; freed from commonplaceness or grossness; refined and imaginative; as, an ideal face; ideal beauty. 5. Math. Pertaining to the doctrine of ideation; existing as an archetypal idea or pattern; specif., relating to the Platonic idea. 6. Math. That can not be actually represented on a diagram, or that is not subject to the system under consideration; as, an ideal bitangent (a real line touching a curve at two imaginary points.) 7. Projective Geom. Existing at an infinite distance. [OF. (F. idéal), < L. idealis, < Gr. idea, idea.]

Syn.: fanciful, fanciful, imaginary, unreal, visionary. See PERFECT. Compare synonyms for IDEAL, n.—Ant.: actual, material, physical, real, substantial, tangible, visible.—ideal number, a complex number from another system introduced as a factor of a number which is prime so far as the system under consideration is concerned. Ideal numbers exist only as factors of themselves, their products into themselves forming actual numbers. Such ideal factors are conceived for complex numbers in order to express certain sets of associated conditions, which are satisfied by the coefficients of such numbers. They are analogous to the radical in chemistry, the complex number being represented by the symbol for the element.—i-de'al-ar'al, a. Partaking of both the ideal and the real; pertaining to ideal-realism.—i.-realism, n. Philos. A systematic attempt to effect a compromise between the claims of realism, idealism and realism. In its more ordinary form, the doctrines of idealism with respect to thought and knowledge are accepted, and the attempt is made to reconcile them with the realistic conceptions of space, time, and the physical universe.

i-de'al, n. 1. A product of thought and imagination, to which any corresponding real existence is not necessarily attributed, but which appears in consciousness as an object worthy of contemplation or aspiration; as, Washington is my ideal of a patriot; the Venus of Milo is an ideal of grace; I expect never to reach my ideal of comfort.

It is impossible to tell what human history would have been without the ennobling influence of human models, and religious ideals. It is safe to say that there would have been no human history at all.

G. T. LADD Life, Knowledge, and Reality p. 268. [D. M. & CO. '09.]

2. That which exists only in imagination, fancy, or idea; a conception beyond realization; as, the perfect circle is an ideal only.

Somehow that imaginative principle — the power of going out of one's self, and forgetting the actual in the ideal — . . . must be brought into the being of him who would catch all the magnificence of the Alhambra.

G. S. HILLARD Six Months in Italy vol. i. p. 204. [T. & P. 1854.]

3. Math. An aggregation of integers belonging to a corpus, whose nature is such that every sum and every difference of any two of its elements, as well as any product of an element by an integer, is also an element.

Syn.: archetype, ectype, idea, model, original, pattern, prototype, standard, type. See IDEA.—Ant.: actuality, fact, the highest type of excellence or ultimate object of attainment. The archetype is the primal form, actual or imaginary, according to which anything else is constructed; the prototype has or has had actual existence; in the derived sense, as in metrology, a prototype may not be the original form, but one having equal authority with that as a standard. An ideal may be primal, or may be merely developed even from failures and by negations; an ideal is meant to be perfect, not merely the thing that has been attained or is to be attained, but the best conceivable thing that could by possibility be attained. The artist's ideal is his own mental image, of which his finished work is but an imperfect expression. The original is the first specimen, good or bad; the original of a master is superior to all copies. The standard may be below the ideal. The ideal is imaginary, and ordinarily unattainable; the standard is concrete, and ordinarily attainable, being a measure to which all else of its kind must conform; as, the standard of weights and measures, of corn, or of cotton. The idea of virtue is the mental concept or image of virtue in its highest conceivable perfection. See EXAMPLE; IDEA.—Ant.: achievement, act, attainment, development, doing, embodiment, execution, fact, incarnation, performance, practise, reality, realization.

i'de-al'ics, 1 ai'dĭ-al'ĭks; 2 ĭ'dē-al'ĭks, n. The cultivation of ideals; specif., in sociology, the development of social ideals through the application of sociological knowledge.

i-de'al-ism, 1 ai-dē'al-izm; 2 ĭ-dē'al-ĭzm, n. 1. Philos. That system of reflective thinking which would interpret and explain the entire universe, things and minds and their relations, as the realization of a system of ideas, or as the progressive evolution of an ideal. It takes various forms as determined by the relative rôle that the idea or ideal is, and of how we become sure of it.

Idealism is customarily regarded as, and in particulars often is, the antithesis of realism; but the extremes of each are obliged, while denying many, to admit a few of the claims of the other. On the other hand, while agnosticism admits the possibility of reality as independent of consciousness, it denies the possibility of knowing such reality. Idealism, therefore, differs from agnosticism by refusing to admit the possibility of a non-ideal reality.

The following forms of idealism are worthy of special mention: absolute or logical idealism, such as that of Hegel, which holds that all existences have their reality only as "moments" in the Absolute, or thoughts or ideas in the Universal Reason (akin to the Platonic idealism); Berkelean or phenomenal i., the doctrine of Bishop Berkeley, who, starting from the psychological assumption that the essence of the being of things is in their being perceived by us, arrived at the conclusion that only souls, finite minds, and God have any real existence: cosmothetic i., the doctrine that the reality of the external world is a tenable assumption, but that we can have no knowledge of what it is; egoistic i., the doctrine that the individual can know only the reality, or actuality, of his own mental states; epistemological i., idealism as based on a theory of knowledge (epistemology) which holds that only data of self-consciousness are knowable: in the history of philosophy its issue has been either the dogmatic scepticism of Locke, the subjective idealism of Berkeley, or the skepticism of Hume; ethical i., a term applied to the view of Lotze that the universe is a mechanical system which must be interpreted teleologically, or in the light of its controlling ideas: metaphysical i., the doctrine that reality is fundamentally psychic or mental in character, as the teachings of Aristotle, Plato, etc., or that consciousness or reason constitutes the essential nature of reality, as the theories of Hegel and his followers: objective i., the doctrine of von Schelling that the relation between the knowing subject and the object of his thought is one of absolute identity: the reality of each is therefore guaranteed in every act of cognition; subjective i., the psychological doctrine which makes the essence of every real thing to consist in its being perceived: the doctrine of esse est percipi as held by the earlier view of Berkeley; also applied to Fichte's doctrine of the absolute ego; transcendental i., a term given by Kant to his doctrine that, while the ideas or intuitions of reason are antecedent to and independent of experience, their use beyond the realm of experience is unwarrantable and leads to illusion.

The revival of the Fichte-Hegelian idealism by means of a method which shall do justice to the results of science by a closer adherence to experience, by making general use of both the natural and mental sciences, and by an exact and cautious mode of argument — this seems to us to be the task of the future.

R. FALCKENBERG Hist. of Modern Philos. p. 632. (Armstrong's tr.) [C. in. & co. 1893.]

2. The quest of the ideal; the habit of forming ideals and of striving after their realization; by extension, that which is so realized; the attainment of an ideal.

All the wonder and idealism and devotion of a girl's early love.

WILLIAM BLACK Daughter of Heth p. 246. [H. 1877.]

3. Art. The endeavor to attain perfection by improving and uniting in one form all the best qualities to be found in different individual forms.

While realism, in art and literature, strives to portray things with scientific accuracy and detail, allowing comparatively restricted play for the imaginative faculty, idealism creates from the imagination a type of beauty in conformity with a preconceived ideal. Idealism will thus be seen to cover a wide range in the field of art, from the work of pure imagination, in which no attempt is made to conform to facts, to the representation of reality with only a slight tinge of modifying color, introduced to emphasize certain features or aspects of the whole.

i-de'al-ist, 1 ai-dē'al-ist; 2 ĭ-dē'al-ĭst, n. 1. One who idealizes, or seeks an ideal or ideal conditions; specif., one who is an advocate or exponent of idealism in art: opposed to realist.

Grief too will make us idealists. EMERSON Essays, Experience in second series, p. 46. [H. M. & CO. 1890.]

2. One who holds the doctrines of philosophic idealism: opposed to a realist in philosophy.

The dispute between the idealist and the realist in no way concerns the phenomenal world.

BOWEN Metaphysics pt. iii, p. 452. [H. 1882.]

3. A poetical or romantic person.

i-de'al-is'tic, 1 ai-dē'al-is'tik; 2 ĭ-dē'al-ĭs'tic, a. Of or pertaining to idealism or the idealists; tending to or striving after idealism or the ideal.

We must distinguish two kinds of reality: the universe may be of the same nature as my consciousness of it; or it may be radically and absolutely unlike my consciousness. Philosophic systems are idealistic or non-idealistic as they give the first or the second answer to the question.

CALKINS Persistent Problems of Philosophy p. 10. [MACM. '10.]

The scheme [Spinoza's] leans over . . . now to the materialistic, and now to the idealistic side. MARTINEAU Types of Ethical Theory vol. i, bk. i, branch ii, p. 224. [H. 1885.]

i'de-al'i-ty, 1 ai'dĭ-al'ĭ-ti; 2 ĭ'dē-al'ĭ-ty, n. [-TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tiş, pl.] 1. The condition or character of being ideal, unreal, or imaginary; also, an imaginary perfect object; an ideal.

His life was devoted to reducing his idealities to realities.

J. T. MORSE, JR. Thomas Jefferson p. 15. [H. M. & CO. 1887.]

2. The power or tendency to form ideals; imagination; in phrenology, the faculty that gives a sense of beauty in things or thought; taste.

Illustrations . . . bring into play the imaginative faculty, which is only another name for ideality.

I'dem, 1 ai'dem; 2 I'dĕm. [L.] The same: used largely in references to authorities cited, indicating the volume, record, or the like, last cited: abbreviated id.—I'dem-fa'cient, a. Math. In multiple algebra, quantities unchanged when multiplied by a certain basis.—I'dem-fa'cient, a. Math. Giving itself as a product when used as multiplier of a certain basis.—I'dem-fa'cient, n. Math. A quantity or symbol that remains unchanged when multiplied by itself.—i-dem'potent, a. Remaining unchanged when multiplied into itself, as unity in ordinary algebra.

I'dem so'nans. Law. Similarity of sound between words of somewhat different spelling, held to identify such words as being the same, in indictments, pleadings, etc.; as, Hutson for Hudson: murder "on or about" (or two) such day of which has been judicially defined as idem sonans. It is generally held that a variation, to be material, must prejudicially mislead an opponent. Similarly, having the same sound.

I'den, 1 ai'den; 2 I'dĕn, Alexander. A Kentish squire, who killed Jack Cade; he lived about 1450; is introduced in Shakespeare's 2 Henry VI.

i-den'ti-cal, 1 ai-den'ti-kəl; 2 I-dĕn'ti-cal, a. 1. Absolutely the same, as in essence or in all respects; the very same; one and the same: opposed to different, and contrasted with similar. Life and Times vol. ii, p. 10. [s. 1871.]

3. Indicating identity; as, an identical equation. See EQUATION. 4. In diplomacy, framed in precisely similar terms, as official notes from different governments, for the purpose of exerting the same influence: in this sense usually identic. [< F. identique, < LL. identicus, < L. idem, the same.] i-den'tic. Syn.: see ALIKE.—identical operation (Math.), an operation that leaves the operand unchanged, as multiplying by unity.—i. points (Optics.) corresponding points on the retinas of the two eyes so related that rays striking them from any one point in the field of vision produce a single sensory impression.—i. proposition (Logic), a proposition in which the two terms are precisely the same in content and extent, the predicate imparting no new attribute to the subject, as "man is a human being."—i-den'ti-cal-ly, adv.—i-den'ti-cal-ness, n.

i-den'ti-fi-ca'tion, 1 ai-den'ti-fi-kē'shən; 2 I-dĕn'ti-fi-cā'shon, n. 1. The act or process of recognizing or showing to be the same; the state of being shown or proved to be identical. 2. The act or process of determining from appearance or other evidence who or what a person or thing is; as, the identification was made complete by an examination of the teeth. 3. Specif., in natural history, the act or process of determining the species, genus, order, etc., to which a specimen belongs.—identification disk or tag, a metal disk or tag of metal or leather which bears its owner's name, rank, number, and faith: worn by soldiers under fire to establish the identity of the killed or wounded. identity disk or tag.—i. patch, a tag attached to a soldier's back to aid in identifying his unit when going into action behind a barrage.

i-den'ti-fy, 1 ai-den'ti-fai; 2 I-dĕn'ti-fy, v. [-FIED; -FY-ING.] I. t. 1. To assert, verify, or prove to be absolutely the same.

The New Testament . . . clearly identifies the Logos or Son of God with the Angel of Jehovah . . . of the Old Testament.
C. HODGE Systematic Theology vol. i, pt. i, p. 489. [s. 1872.]

2. To represent, declare, or recognize to be the same as named or as suppressed; as, to identify the payee of a check at a bank; to identify a corpse. 3. To make one with; unite; incorporate: usually followed by with; as, to identify one's interests with those of another; he identified himself with the party. 4. To ascertain, recognize, or determine the personality, character, or relations of; specif., in natural history, to recognize in the proper species, genus, order, etc.; as, to identify a prisoner; to identify a fossil as a cetnoid. 5. To serve as a mark for recognition or identification of; as, the teeth identified the skull.

I have been trying for years to get a brief term, or phrase, that would identify and describe that robin-call. WALT WHITMAN Specimen Days, Apr. 26, 1879 p. 131. [a. w. s co. 1882.]

II. i. [Rare.] To become the same: coalesce in interest, purpose, use, effect, etc. [< LL. identicus (see IDENTICAL) + -FY.] —i-den'ti-fi"a-bl(e², a.—i-den'ti-fi"er, n.

i-den'tism, 1 ai-den'tizm; 2 I-dĕn'tĭzm, n. The philosophy of Schelling, which maintained the identity of subject and object; objective idealism. See IDEALISM.

i-den'tist, 1 ai-den'tist; 2 I-dĕn'tĭst, n. 1. Med. A believer in the practical identity of certain diseases commonly considered several and distinct. 2. Philos. An adherent to the philosophical doctrine of identism.

i-den'ti-ty, 1 ai-den't-i-ti; 2 I-dĕn'ti-ty, n. [-TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tĭz, pl.] 1. The state or quality of being identical or absolutely the same; the relation that a thing bears to itself in its present or continued existence; sameness. Identity may be of two sorts: absolute, which involves exact equality with itself, or selfsameness; and relative, a less rigid sense, which implies a close material resemblance or similarity, as that of the green of two leaves. 2. Math. An identical equation. See EQUATION. 3. The distinctive character and appearance belonging to an individual or a class, by which it may be known. 4. Specif., the state of being what is asserted or claimed; as, to prove one's identity. [< LL. identitas, < identicus; see IDENTICAL.]—identity of indiscernibles (Metaph.), a theory formulated by Leibnitz, to support his monadic doctrine against the Atomists, in which he claimed that no two monads can be exactly alike, that no two objects can be entirely similar. This theory is of obvious application in problems of the differential calculus.—numerical or individual i., literal sameness: the relation of everything that exists or that can exist to itself, as being itself.—old i. [Austral.], a well-known old resident; old-stager; oldtimer.—personal i., the continued existence of each person as the same: based on the authority of self-consciousness and recognitive memory.—principle or law of i. (Logic), the universal affirmation of identity, as formulated in the logical statement: A is A, or A = A.

Med.* Idiosyncrasy in speech; constitutional peculiarity in form of speech, especially when abnormal.

id"i-om, 1 id'i-əm; 2 idĭ'om, n. 1. A use of words peculiar to a particular language, especially if it be an irregularity; a form of speech characteristic of a writer or a tongue.

Every language, more especially the English, has its idioms, which we should not express, with grammarians and lexicographers, among its irregularities, but, with poets and orators, number among its beauties. SIR J. HERSCHEL Essays p. 2.

A clear understanding of idioms and idiomatic phrases is made necessary by the fact that so much of futile criticism of faulty diction originates in misapprehensions of their nature and functions.

Idiom, or idiomatic phrase, as here used, is a phrase the meaning of which can not be deduced from its component parts. The following are examples of idiomatic phrases: to bring about (accomplish); to bring to pass; to carry out (make effective; accomplish); to come by (obtain); to go hard with (be painful or harmful to); to make out (tolerate; endure); to set about (begin). An examination of these phrases shows that the meaning of each (when used in its idiomatic sense) belongs to the phrase as a single element, and is not a composite effect made by joining the meanings of its parts. This peculiarity of such phrases becomes apparent if we compare them with phrases that are not in this sense idiomatic: as, to go to the city, to bring to pass meaning, nothing, each of which has a meaning that is contributed to the meaning of the phrase.

Idiomatic phrases should be carefully distinguished from figurative phrases, or phrases in which the words have their ordinary connections and relations but are used figuratively: as, to break down a Venezuelan monopoly; to bring the changes on; to set a trap for; to stand in one's own light. It is not well to multiply figurative phrases, since their very frequent use tends to obscure thought and weaken the attention.

It is probable, however, that many, perhaps most, idiomatic phrases originated in figurative speech, and afterward passed into the idiomatic stage by insensible transitions, becoming in the transition more and more remote from phrases as, to carry through (accomplish; effect); to hold forth (utter, especially publicly); to put down (suppress); to put off (defer); to go without (be in want).

2. A peculiar speech or jargon; a language or dialect used by a special class, as the Gipsy idiom. 3. The peculiar genius or spirit of a language.

The genuine English idiom is newly preserved by the unmixed English of this country as it is by the best English writers.
H. E. SCUDDER Noah Webster p. 241. [n. s. a. co. 1882.]

4. Specific character; peculiarity. [< LL. idioma, < Gr. idiōma, < idios, one's own.] Syn.: see LANGUAGE.

id"i-om-at'ic, 1 id"i-əm-at'ik; 2 idĭ"i-om-at'ic, a. 1. Full of idiom; peculiar to or containing idiom; especially, vernacular; as, idiomatic English.

The Scottish character has a strong, terse, idiomatic way of expressing itself.
PATRICK HOOD Scottish Characteristics p. 175. [r. s w. co.]

2. Peculiar to a certain language or dialect; dialectal. [< Gr. idiōmatikos, < idios, see IDIOM.] id"i-om-at'ical.—id"i-om-at'i-cal-ly, adv.—id"i-om'a-tism, n.

id"i-om'e-ter, n. An apparatus for determining any one's personal equation by causing him to observe the transit of a mechanical star whose motion is known.—id"i-om-og'ra-phy, n. A description of idiomatic expressions.—id"i-om-ol'o-gy, n. The study of idioms.—id"i-o-mor'phic, *a. id"i-ot, 1 id'i-ət; 2 id'i-ot, n. To make an idiot of.

id'i-ot, a. Idiotic.

id'i-ot, n. 1. A human being born abnormally defective in intellectual capacity; one nearly or quite destitute of intellect, whether as the result of congenital defect or to impeded activity of the brain or organs of sense; a "natural fool" (so Blackstone); sometimes, one who has lost all mental power; an imbecile.

The child is not capable of learning to read. If he has the mental faculties, they are not sufficiently developed to be capable of the requisite service. As he rises into idiocy he rises into moral accountability. D. S. GARDNER Christian Ethics p. 132. [s. & J.]

A man is not an idiot, if he hath any glimmering of reason, so that he can tell his parents, his age, or the like common matters.

BLACKSTONE Commentaries bk. i, p. 304.

2. A foolish fellow; dunce; imbecile: used as a term of reproach.

Henry Cockeram published a dictionary in 1623. . . His definition of an idiote as "an unlearned ass" has the merit of brevity and comprehensive expression. FRANK H. VIZETELLY The Development of the Dictionary p. [s. & w. co. 15].

3†. An illiterate person. 4†. A court fool; jester. 5†. A private person, as distinguished from a public official.

'Idiot' . . . is abundantly characteristic of Greek life. The 'idiot' is, or originally the private man, as contradistinguished from one clothed with office, and taking his share in the management of public affairs. In this its primary sense it was often used in the English of the seventeenth century, as by Hooker and Taylor says, 'Humility is a duty in great ones, as well as in idiots.' It came then to signify a rude, ignorant, unskilled, intellectually unexercised person, a boor; the defect or secondary sense bearing witness to a conviction woven deep into the Greek mind that contact with life . . . was indispensable even to the right development of the intellect.

R. C. TRENCH Study of Words p. 111. [E. P. & CO. 1888.]

5. Without effect; useless; vain; as, idle rage. 6. Mech. Having motion that is of no value; as, a wide designed machine has few idle parts; to run idle. 7†. Light-headed. [< AS. idel, empty.]

Syn.: abstract, lazy, slothful, sluggish, unemployed, unoccupied. Idle is the word used when one rests upon its root meaning, as derived from the Anglo-Saxon idel, which signifies vain, empty, useless. Idle thus denotes not primarily the absence of occupation, but vain occupation — the absence of useful, effective action; the idle schoolboy may be very actively whittling his desk or tormenting his neighbors. Doing nothing whatever is the secondary meaning of idle. One may be temporarily idle of necessity; it he is habitually idle, it is his own fault. A lazy person may chance to be employed in useful work, but he acts without energy or impetus. We speak figuratively of a lazy stream. The inert person seems like dead matter (compare INERTIA), powerless to move; the sluggish moves heavily and toilsomely; the most active person may sometimes find the bodily or mental powers sluggish. Slothful belongs in the moral realm, denoting a self-indulgent aversion to exertion. "The slothful hideth his hand in his bosom, and shall not bring it again to his mouth." Prov. xxvi, 15. Indolent is a milder term for the same quality; the slothful man hates action; the indolent man feels no impulse to it. Compare VAIN. — Ant.: active, busy, diligent, employed, industrious, occupied, working.

—I'dle-head"ed†, a. 1. Distracted; delirious. 2. Stupid; foolish.—I'dle-head"ed-ness†, n.—I'dle-head†; I'dle-hood†; I'dle-ship†.

I. E. E., abbr. [Brit.] Institute of Electrical Engineers.

-ier, suffix. A termination of nouns denoting vocation, occupation, or profession; as, cashier, clothier. In words of the Middle English period the suffix is very obscure and seemingly derived from many sources. Cottier may be considered to be one of the common examples, having its origin in the Old French cotier and the Latin cotarius, while the French ier is the suffix in words of more modern introduction, such as bombardier, fusilier, grenadier, and cuirassier [= -ist], preceded by formative -r-. [Aristotle.

I-er'ne, 1 ai-ŭr'ni; 2 ī-ĕr'nī, n. A name of Ireland: used by ire''-oe', 1 ir'-ō'; 2 ĕr'-ō', n. [Scot.] A great-grandchild.

I'fe-zi'as, 1 ai'i-zai'as; 2 ī'e-zī'as, n. Bib. (Apocrypha, R. V., margin). 1 Esd. ix, 26.

If, 1 if; 2 ĭf, n. The European yew (Taxus baccata).

If, 1 if; 2 ĭf, n. A rocky islet in the Gulf of Marseilles, France; castle where Mirabeau and Orléans (Égalité) were imprisoned.

If, 1 if; 2 ĭf, conj. [If is the typical conditional particle, and is used nearly always to introduce the subordinate or hypothetical clause of a conditional sentence.] 1. On the supposition that; provided or on condition that: implying nothing as to the truth or falsity of the condition; as, if you ever come to town, come to see me; if I can get away, I will go next week. 2. On the (improbable or impossible) supposition that; even granting that; although: implying that the condition is doubtful or false; as, I will go, if I die for it; if I were a felon, you could not treat me worse. 3. On the (valid or true) supposition that; altho; because: implying the truth of the condition; as, he was angry before, he was raging now; if I am poor, I am not dishonest; if I am not afraid now, why should I ever be? 4. At the time when; whenever: combining the ideas of condition and time; as, they always knew where to find him; if she called, he hastened to her. 5. Whether: introducing an indirect question or object clause; as, ask if he will go; I do not know if he will. 6. As an exclamation in a conditional clause that stands alone: as, if it is not raining!

The use of if for whether is properly condemned, except in colloquial and poetic language, for the obvious reason that when there is a common word meaning precisely a certain thing, a word meaning precisely another thing should not be used for it without some special ground. "Go and see if [instead of whether] the package has come" is common colloquial use. It is doubtful whether in this case the indolence that is so often the warrant for using a shorter word justifies its use, while such use is certainly not justifiable if it results from ignorance or unnecessariness. The exigencies of rhythmic construction may call for the employment of if for whether in poetry, and it has the support of Milton, Shakespeare, Dryden, Prior, Cowper, Tennyson, Lowell, and other masters of style.

I'll . . . try your penitence if it be sound,
Or hollowly put on.
Shakespeare Measure for Measure act ii, sc. 4.

[< AS. gif, lf.] —If'-all'', conj. Altho; even if.

There is Bryant, as quiet, as cool and as dignified.
As a smooth, silent iceberg, that never is ignified.
Lowell Fable for Critics st. 35.

—Ig-nig'e-nous, a. [Rare.] Geol. Igneous: said of rocks. —Ig-nip'o-tent, a. Presiding over fire, as Vulcan.—Ig-nip'o-tence, n. Ig'nis fat'u-us, 1 ig'nis fat'yu-us; 2 ĭg'nĭs făt'yu-ŭs. [ig'-NES FAT'-U-S, 1 ig'nīz fat'yu-əs; 2 ĭg'nēz făt'yu-ŭs, pl.] [L.] 1. A phosphorescent light, often seen in the air over marshy places, supposed to be caused by the evolution and spontaneous combustion of some highly inflammable gas; corpse-candle; Jack-o'-lantern; will-o'-the-wisp. By some persons it is doubted.

And leads men into pools and ditches.
S. Butler Hudibras pt. i, can. 1, l. 509.

2. Figuratively, a delusion; deceptive attraction.

Ig-nite', 1 ig-nait'; 2 ĭg-nīt', v. [IG-NIT'ED; IG-NIT'ING.] I. t. 1. To kindle or set on fire. 2. To cause to become luminous or incandescent from heat; as, to ignite platinum. 3. Hence, to cause to appear luminous.

Over the rugged face of the Brethrem itself the light fell in splashes, igniting its glaciers and swathing its black crags.
R. L. Stevenson Travels with a Donkey pt. iv, [c. a. c. 1871.]

II. i. 1. To take fire.

When a piece of steel is struck by a flint, particles of the metal are torn off, and are so intensely heated as to ignite in the air.
B. Silliman, Jun. Physics p. 491. [r. n. & c.]

2. To glow with intense heat. [< L. ignitus, pp. of ignio, < ignis, fire.] Syn.: see KINDLE. —Ig-nit'a-ble [-bl-(ē)], a. Capable of being ignited; easily kindled or excited. Ig-nit'a-bli-ty, n. —Ig-nit'i-bil'i-ty, n. The quality of being ignitible. Ig-nit'i-ble [-bl].

Ig-nit'er, 1 ig-nait'ər; 2 ĭg-nīt'er, n. 1. One who or that which ignites. 2. Mining. A metal cylinder which connects a main fuse with separate fuses which are only limited by the number of drill holes to be fired. 3. A device for igniting the gases, as in an internal-combustion engine. Ig-ni'tor.— flame igniter, a device for igniting the gases in an internal-combustion engine — hot-tube i., a metal tube in internal-combustion engines which is kept hot for the purpose of igniting the charge in the cylinder. — Ig-nit'er-lead'', n. The governor of a gas-engine which regulates the period of the explosion by its relation to the position of the piston.— Jablochkoff i., in a Jablochkoff candle, a strip of metal which at first conveys the current between the two terminals, and later is consumed and ignites the arc.— jump-spark i. (Auto.), an electric igniter so constructed that the spark springs from one fixed terminal to the other. — make-and-break i., an igniter for igniting an explosive mixture by means of a spark.

Ig-ni'tion, 1 ig-nish'on; 2 ĭg-nĭsh'on, n. 1. The act of igniting, or the state of being ignited: specif. (Mech.), the act of exploding the charge of gases in the cylinder of an internal-combustion engine.

Every substance requires for its ignition a definite temperature or temperature of ignition. V. von Richter Inorg. Chem. tr. by E. F. Smith, p. 160. [r. a. & c. o. '83.]

2. Chem. The act of heating to incandescence, or to a high degree; as, the ignition of a precipitate to expel organic and volatile matter. 3. [Rare.] Percussion material or detonating powder used to fire ignis; see IGNITE.] — advancing ignition, causing an early ignition of the spark, as in motor-car engines. — electric i., a method of ignition by an electric spark: employed in certain forms of internal-combustion engines. — flame i., the use of a flame igniter. — ig-ni'tion-box'', n. The compartment in which ignition takes place in a gas-engine. — Ig-ni'tor, n. Igniter of easily exploded powder or explosive used, as in a gun, shell, or mine, to cause the explosion of the main charge of smokeless powder, guncotton, dynamite, or other more resistant explosive; also called priming charge or primer.— i-point, n. The moment of ignition; especially in an explosion-motor.— i.-timing, n. The process of regulating the period of ignition with reference to the motion of the piston in an internal-combustion engine.— i.-valve, n. The valve which opens to allow a spark or flame to ignite a charge and closes after the explosion. — ig-nit'ed-ness, n. — ig-nit'er-ship, n. — ig-nit'ing-ly, adv. — ig-nit'ive, a. Igniting.

Ig-nit'ure, 1 ig-nait'yur; 2 ĭg-nīt'yŭr, n. [Rare.] Ignition.

Ig-nit'us, 1 ig-nait'us; 2 ĭg-nīt'ŭs, n. [L.] Ignition.

Ig'no-bel, 1 ig'no-bel; 2 ĭg'nō-bĕl, n. [Rare.] A person of low birth.

Ig-no'bi-le, 1 ig-nō'bi-li; 2 ĭg-nō'bĭ-lē, n. [L.] The ignoble class collectively, especially as exercising political influence: opposed to the nobility.

Ig-no'ble, 1 ig-nō'bl; 2 ĭg-nō'bl, a. Not noble; of low birth, not in the name of the ideas, is a Philistine.

Matthew Arnold Essays in Criticism p. 155. [c. a. r. 1866.]

Ig''no-min'i-ous, 1 ig''no-min'i-us; 2 ĭg'no-mĭn'ĭ-ŭs, a. 1. Entailing or implying ignominy or disgrace; dishonoring; shameful; as, ignominious punishment. 2. Deserving ignominy; despicable; contemptible; as, an ignominious card. Cp. ignominious and humiliating, an ignominious blow. [< L. ignominiosus, < ignominia; see IGNOMINY.] Ig-no'mi-nous‡. Syn.: see INFAMOUS.— Ig''no-min'i-ous-ly, adv. — Ig''no-min'i-ous-ness, n.

Ig'no-min-y, 1 ig'no-min-i; 2 ĭg'no-mĭn-y, n. [=IES, 1 -iz; 2 -ĭz, pl.] 1. Public disgrace or dishonor; degradation.

It is unwise to punish cowards with ignominy; for if they had regarded that, they would not have been cowards. Swift Works, Thoughts on Various Subjects p. 515. [w. r. n. 1871.]

2. That which causes disgrace or dishonor; as, flight was ignominy. [< F. ignominie, < L. ignominia, < in-, not, + nomen (nomin-), name.] Ig'no-my‡.

Syn.: abasement, contempt, disgrace, dishonor, disrepute, infamy, obloquy, odium, opprobrium, reproach, scandal, shame. — Ant.: applause, credit, distinction, eminence, fame, glory, praise, renown, reputation, repute.

Ig-nor'a-bi(e)', 1 ig-nōr'a-bi; 2 ĭg-nōr'a-bĭ, a. & n. That may be ignored.

Ig''no-ra'mus, 1 ig''nō-rē'mus; 2 ĭg'no-rā'mŭs, n. 1. An ignorant person; especially, an ignorant pretender to knowledge. 2. Law. Literally, we ignore it;

(1) The indorsement formerly placed by a grand jury across a bill presented against one charged with crime, when the evidence was not sufficient to warrant the bringing of a true bill. In some of the United States, the phrase "not a true bill," or "not found" is used instead, but, universally, juries are said to ignore a bill or an indictment. (2) A bill returned thus indorsed. [L., 1st per. pl. pres. ind. of ignore; see IGNORE.]

ig'no-rance, ı̆ ig'no-rans; 2 ĭg'no-rans, n. 1. The state of being ignorant; voluntary or involuntary lack of knowledge in general, or of knowledge in a particular subject; the condition of not being informed; especially, want of information on topics embraced in the common knowledge of the world; as, ignorance of politics or of business. Compare AGNOSTICISM. 2. An act, offense, or sin due to ignorance.

That it may please thee to . . . forgive us all our sins, negligences and ignorances. The Book of Common Prayer, The Litany.
[P., < L. ignorantia, < ignorant(-)s, ppr. of ignare; see IGNORE.] ig'no-ran-cy†. SYN.: see ILLITERACY.

—invincible ignorance (it. C. Theol.), ignorance of the Church's doctrine which, either through inherent limitations or inescapable surroundings, can not be overcome.

ig'no-rant, ı̆ ig'no-rant; 2 ĭg'no-rant, a. 1. Destitute of education or knowledge; unknowing; uninstructed or uninformed.

The wisdom of the ignorant somewhat resembles the instinct of animals: it is diffused in but a very narrow sphere.
Goldsmith Citizen of the World, ii. 310. [sc. a w.]

2. Unacquainted, unaware, or not cognizant; unconscious; as, ignorant of the truth.

To be ignorant of one's ignorance is the malady of the ignorant.
A. Bronson Alcott Tablet-Talk, p. 84. [n. nasos. 1877.]

3. Manifesting or characterized by ignorance or lack of judgment; as, ignorant criticism. 4. Unwittingly done; as, an ignorant sin. 5†. Unknown. [F., < L. ignorant(-)s; see IGNORANCE.]

SYN.: ill-informed, illiterate, uneducated, uninformed, unlearned, unlearned, unlettered, unskilled, untaught, untutored. Ignorant signifies lacking knowledge or information; it is thus a relative term. The most learned man is still ignorant of many things; persons are spoken of as ignorant who have not the knowledge that has become generally diffused in the world. Ignorance is relative; the ignorant savage may be well instructed in matters of the field and the chase, and is thus more properly untutored than ignorant. Illiterate is without learning, or the knowledge that comes through reading. Unlettered is similar in meaning to illiterate, but less absolute; the unlettered man may have acquired the art of reading and writing, and some elementary knowledge; the uneducated man has never taken any systematic course of mental training.—ANT.: educated, instructed, learned, skilled, taught, trained, well-informed, wise.

ig'no-rant, n. [Rare.] An ignorant person.

Ig'no-ran'tin, ı̆ ig'no-ran'tin, n. [F.] 1. A member of the Roman Catholic order of the Brothers of the Christian Schools, who devote themselves to teaching the poor and ignorant. 2. A friar of the teaching order of Brethren of St. Jean de Dieu (instituted 1495). The name was assumed to express their humility; so called, originally, in deprecation. Ig'no-ran'tine;. = Ig'no-ran'tin, a.

ig'no-rant-ism, ı̆ ig'no-rant-izm; 2 ĭg'no-rant-ĭzm, n. Opposition to the spread of education regarded as espousal of the cause of ignorance; obscurantism.—ig'no-rant-ist, n.

ig'no-rant-ly, ı̆ ig'no-rant-li; 2 ĭg'no-rant-ly, adv. Without knowledge in the manner of one untaught or uninformed. Ig'no-ra'tion, ı̆ ig'no-rē'shon; 2 ĭg'no-rā'shon, n. 1. Lack of discrimination between objects of thought. 2. The act of ignoring; state of being ignored. 3†. A condition of ignorance. [< ignorant(-)s, + -ion; see IGNORE.] —ignoration of the elench (ignoratio elenchi), in logic, a fallacy that consists in ignoring, either intentionally or inadvertently, the point at issue; a misapply of arguing of the point. See FALLACY.

ig-nore', ı̆ ig-nōr'; 2 ĭg-nōr', vt. [IG-NORED'; IG-NOR'ING.] 1. To pass without notice, or as unworthy of notice; leave out of consideration; slight; disregard.

Instead of respecting the body and ignoring the mind, we now respect the mind and ignore the body.

It is traditionally ascribed to Homer, but is held by some modern scholars, as Wolf, Heyne, and Grote, on the ground of internal evidence, to be a joint composition; the work of several hands. Compare ACHILLEID.

I have the firmest conviction that Homer is a mere traditional synonym with, or figure for, the Iliad.
COLERIDGE Table Talk July 9, 1832.

No doubt was ever entertained by the ancients respecting the personality of Homer. Pindar, Plato, Aristotle, and others all assumed this fact; nor did they even doubt that the 'Iliad' and 'Odyssey' were the work of one mind.

Il-lit'er-a-cy, 1 i-lit'er-a-si; 2 i-lĭt'er-a-cy, n. [-CIES, 1-SIZ; 2 -cis, pl.] 1. The state of being illiterate or untaught; lack of education; ignorance of letters; in statistics, inability to read, or, sometimes, to read and write; as, the illiteracy of emigrants. 2. [Rare.] A literary blunder or series of such blunders; as, the illiteracy of a book.

Syn.: ignorance. Ignorance is relative; illiteracy is positive. We have statistics of illiteracy; no statistics of ignorance are possible. Compare synonyms for IGNORANT. — Ant.: culture, education, knowledge, learning, wisdom.

Il-lit'er-ate, 1 i-lit'er-at; 2 i-lĭt'er-at, a. 1. Ignorant of letters; having little or no book-learning; unlettered; uneducated; specif., in census statistics, unable to read.

The barbarous nations were not only illiterate, but regarded literature with contempt. W. ROBERTSON Charles the Fifth ed. by Prescott Proofs in vol. i, p. 225, note 2. [n. 1864.]

2. Manifesting want of culture; rude; as, illiterate manners; rudeness. 3. [Rare.] Not written upon; unwritten; inarticulate. [< L. illiteratus, < in-, not; and see LITERATE.] Syn.: see IGNORANT. — Il-lit'er-ate-ly, adv. — Il-lit'er-ate-ness, n. The state of being illiterate.

I do not make any very broad distinction between the illiterateness of my townsman who cannot read at all and the illiterateness of him who has learned to read only what is for children textbooks. THOREAU Walden p. 117. [In. m. & co.]

Il-lit'er-ate, n. An uneducated, illiterate person.

Il-lit'er-a-ture, 1 i-lit'er-a-chur or -tur; 2 i-lĭt'er-a-chur or -tŭr, n. 1. Illiteracy. 2. The state of being unlettered; ignorance of literature: distinguished from illiteracy.

Illiteracy, . . . synonymous with the unwieldy unlettered-ness, is a very full-worth reviving. . . . Is your etymology of instances that it by no means goes so far as illiteracy or illiterateness. FITZEDWARD HALL Modern English p. 313. [s. 1873.]

Il'ness, 1 i-lĭ'nes; 2 Il'nĕs, n. 1. The state of being sick or unwell; bodily indisposition; disease.

Illness never in the smallest degree affects my intellectual powers. COLERIDGE Table Talk Sept. 12, 1831.

2. An attack of sickness or indisposition. 3†. Badness; wickedness; evil. 4†. Unfavorableness, as of weather.

Syn.: ailment, complaint, disease, disorder, distemper, indisposition, infirmity, sickness. Sickness was generally used in England, and illness in America, those of the eighteenth century at least, for every form of physical disorder, as abundantly appears in the English Bible: "Jesus went about . . . healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people," Matt. iv, 23; "Elisha was fallen sick of his sickness whereof he died," 2 Kings xiii, 14. There is now in England, a tendency to restrict the words sick and sickness to nausea, or "sickness at the stomach," and to hold ill and illness as the only proper words to use in a general sense. Compare HALE. See DISEASE. — Ant.: health, soundness, strength, vigor.

Il-lo'ca-bl(e), 1 i-lō'kə-bl; 2 i-lō'ca-bl, a. Law. That can not be hired out as a bailment. [< L. illocabilis, < in-, not, + locabilis, that can be hired: see LOCATE.]

In general, those who are or claim to be illuminated; especially, persons who profess to be possessed of remarkable discernment or endowments: a satirical use. 2. Ch. Hist. (1) In early church usage, baptized persons, to whom in the seventh century a lighted taper was given as a symbol of spiritual enlightenment. (2) [I-] Any one of various religious sects, such as the Resychasts in the 14th century, the Alumbrados of Spain in the 16th century, the Guerinets of France in the 17th century, and the Mystics of Belgium in the 18th century, also the Rosicrucians. 3. [I-] A select secret deistic and republican society founded by Adam Weishaupt at Ingolstadt, Bavaria, in 1776, aiming at emancipation, from despotism, and for a few years enjoying a wide popularity before its complete extinction. Order of the Illuminati†.

Immediately his Voltaire'sl friend crowded around him, and his brethren of the Illuminati exhorted him to die like a hero.

T. H. BOHNN Intro. to the Bible vol. i, p. 427. [L. & c. 1872.]

Il-lu'mi-na'tion, 1 i-lū'mi-nē'shən; 2 i-lū'mi-na'shon, n. 1. The act of illuminating, or the state of being illuminated; a lighting up, especially for festal purposes; as, the illumination of the dome on festal occasions. The volume of light thrown upon an object by a luminous body: generally measured by the amount per unit of surface of the object illuminated.

The intensity of illumination on a given surface is inversely as the square of its distance from the source of light. GANOT Physics tr. by Atkinson, bk. vii, p. 422. [w. w. 1877.]

3. Mental enlightenment; intellectual light, especially, in theology, spiritual enlightenment in connection with divine truth, as distinguished from revelation and inspiration.

The last creature of God, in the works of the days, was the light of the senses; the last was the light of reason; and his sabbath work ever since is the illumination of his Spirit.

BACON Works, Essays on Truth iv, p. 261. [l. & a. 1871.]

4. (1) The teaching of the Illuminati. (2) pl. The specific doctrines held by those bodies. 5. Embellishment, as of manuscript, with colors and gold, or a particular figure or design in such ornamentation; specif., ornament in plain, flat colors or gold, without shading, within distinctly marked outlines.

The earliest illuminations were executed in red minium and the later in cinnabar. Ornaments were usually added until the term came to include ornamented writing of every kind. Golden lettering upon purple or rose-colored vellum was practised by Greeks and Romans, and the Anglo-Saxon and Irish manuscripts of the 6th and 7th centuries afford beautiful examples of this art as practised by the monks.

6. The doctrine of the religious Illuminati; undue exaltation of enlightenment or knowledge. 7. Occult. One of the three successive degrees of ascent to union with God, represented by a form of mystic communion. [F., < LL. illuminatio(n-), < L. illumino; see ILLUME.]

Syn.: see LIGHT.

Il-lu'mi-nous, a. 1. [Rare.] Dark; not luminous. 2†. Bright; Il'u-pā, 1 Il'u-pē; 2 Il'u-pā, n. [E. Ind.] A butter-tree (Bassia longifolia) of the family Sapotaceæ. The flowers are roasted and eaten in India; the bark, used as an astringent and as a remedy for itch, exudes a gum reputed as a cure for rheumatism; and the seeds yield oil.

Il-lure', vt. To allure; entice; lure.

il-lu'sion, 1 i-lü'zŏn; 2 ĭ-lü'zhon, n. 1. A mental image which, as compared with the real object represented by it, has a deceptive character, whether this character be due to external influences or to the functioning of the psychophysical mechanism; also, any misleading appearance; an unsubstantial existence; false show; as, a mirage is an optical illusion. 2. Pathol. & Psychol. A sensory impression which misrepresents the true character of the object perceived; false perception. Illusions differ from delusions and hallucinations in that they are ordinarily less persistent than the former and less perfectly objective than the latter. All perception by the senses has more or less of an illusory character. Many general and persistent errors of sense are, therefore, fitly called normal illusions, to distinguish them from such as are due to diseased or abnormal action of the organism, the so-called pathological illusions. Some of the principal classes of normal illusions are the following: geometrical optical illusions, normal errors in the perception of lines, angles, and spaces; illusions of motion, errors as to its direction and rate; pseudoscopic illusions, errors due to any unaccustomed or confused action of the eyes in binocular vision; illusions of the mixing and contrast of colors, and many forms of compound or reduplicated illusion. While these examples are taken almost exclusively from visual perception, all forms of sense-perception are subject to both normal and abnormal illusion.

We may thus roughly define an illusion of perception as consisting in the formation of a quasi-percept which is peculiar to an individual, or which is contradictory to the normal presentality more accurate percept. SULLY Illusions p. 38. [A. 1881.]

3. The act of deceiving or misleading by a false appearance. 4. The state of being deceived; delusion; false impression. 5. Thin material resembling tulle, usually of silk: used for veils and garments. 6. An artistic effect giving the appearance of reality to a painting. 7†. Derision; mockery. [< L. illusio(n-), < illusus, pp. of illudo: see ILLUDE.]

Syn.: delusion. In sense 3, illusion comes close to the meaning of delusion, and was formerly used as synonymous with it; as, the devil's illusions. Now, illusion is applied to innocent, and delusion to injurious or malicious, misleading. See ABERRATION; DELUSION.

—arrowhead and feather illusion, same as MÜLLER-LYER FIGURE.—illusions of extent, optical illusions in which by variation of position or arrangement lines of precisely equal length appear longer or shorter: instances are Helmholtz's squares, Oppel's lines, and the Müller-Lyer figure.—Von Recklinghausen's l., an illusion of direction, consisting of a circular diagram enclosing checkers formed by hyperbolas instead of straight lines: if the center be steadily fixated, the figure gradually takes the appearance of a cheese-board.

Von Recklinghausen's Illusion.

il'se-man'ite, 1 il'se-man'īt; 2 ĭl'se-măn'īt, n. Mineral. A dark-blue molybdenum molybdate ($MoO_4.4MoO_3$) that occurs in fine crystals and is a decomposition product of metallic molybdates. [< J. C. Hisemann (1727–1832).]

il'us, 1 ol'us; 2 ĭl'ŭs, n. Gr. Myth. The father of Laomedon and grandfather of Priam. He was believed to be founder of Troy or Ilium. [L., < Gr. Ilos.] il'va-ite, 1 il'vo-īt; 2 ĭl'va-ĭt, n. Mineral. A submetallic, black, opaque calcium ferroferric silicate, crystallizing in the orthorhombic system. [< L. Ilva, Elba.]

il'vers-ge-ho'fen, 1 il'vers-gē-hō'fen; 2 ĭl'vers-ge-hō'fĕn, n. A manufacturing village, suburb of Erfurt, in Prussian Saxony.

il'yau'thi-dæ, 1 il'i-an'thi-dē; 2 ĭl'ĭ-ăn'thĭ-dē, n. pl. Zoöph. A family of actinozoans variously limited: especially, hexactinians with the aboral end of the body rounded and without pedal disk. il'ya-an'thus, n. (L. g.) [< Gr. ilys, mud, + anthos, flower.] —il'ya-an'thid, a. —il'ya-an'thoid, a.

il'yo-o-gen'ic, 1 il'i-o-jen'ik; 2 ĭl'ĭ-o-ġĕn'ĭc, a. Petrol. Pertaining to rocks of argillaceous origin. [< Gr. ilys, mud, + -GEN.] il'yo-oph'i-dæ, 1 il'i-of'i-dē; 2 ĭl'ĭ-o-fĭf'ĭ-dē, n. pl. A family of enchelycephalous eels with rudimentary scales, gill-openings inferior and horizontal, and enormous conical and slender; opaca eels. il'y-o-phis, n. (L. g.) —il'y-o-phid, il'y-o-phoid, a. & n.

il'y-si'i-dæ, 1 il'i-sī'i-dē; 2 ĭl'ĭ-sī'ĭ-dē, n. pl. Herp. A family of anglostomatous snakes with maxillaries vertical and free from others, and supratemporals small and intercalated in frontal wall; Typhlopidæ is a synonym. [L. g.] [< Gr. ilys, mud.] —il-lys'i-id, n.—il-lys'i-oid, a. & n.

I'm, 1 dim; 2 ĭm. I am: a contraction.

im-, prefix. L. A form of IN-[1] or IN-[2], before labials. W. An assimilated form of EM- used in words of Latin origin; words derived from French sources have EM-, EN-. Hence, many words are found having both EM-and IM-. Words in M- consist for the most part of verbs and their derivatives.

For all words in the following list see corresponding forms under EM- in alphabetical order:

i-mad'-Ed-din', 1 i-mād'-ed-din'; 2 ĭ-mād'-ĕd-dĭn', Mohammed, 'El Kateb' (1125–1201). A Persian poet and historian; secretary to Nur-ed-Din Mahmud and Saladin. [Pillar of religion.]

im'age, abbr. Imaginary; imagination.

im'age, 1 im'ij; 2 ĭm'aġ, pl. [IM'AGED; IM'AG-ING.] 1. To represent by a likeness; form an image of; reflect; mirror; as, the smooth water images the ship.

As the sun can image itself . . . in a tiny dewdrop or in the mighty ocean, . . . so the spirit of poetry can dwell in and glorify alike a wretched inn like Shakespeare's Globe. Words vol. ii, p. 48. [N. P. & CO.]

2. To portray to the mental vision; bring vividly before the imagination as a picture; as, the poet finely images the hero.

What this could image, much I searched to know.
FOLIOT Course of Time bk. i, l. 200.

3. Psychol. To call up or frame a mental picture of; reproduce in the form of a representative idea (what has previously been brought into mind through the senses); represent in memory (any past knowledge from whatever source); imagine; as, to image one's youth.

The mind of man has the power of imaging or representing, in old forms by the memory, and in new forms by the imagination, whatever it has at any time known or experienced.
McCOSH Intuitions pt. i, p. 11. [c. & BROS. 1872.]

4. To resemble; the object of whose his father. 5. To represent under a type; symbolize.

—imaging power, see FANTASY.

Whose is this image and superscription? Matt. xxii, 20.

Nor is there in human life any more evident sign of the personifications of the forces of nature were represented by images or symbols carved out of wood or stone.
MONIER WILLIAMS Hinduism p. 31. [n. & y. r.]

2. Optics. The picture or counterpart of an object produced by reflection or refraction, or the passage of rays through a small aperture. If such an image can be actually thrown on a surface as in a camera, it is a real image; if not, tho visible to the eye as in a mirror, it is a virtual i. See REAL; VIRTUAL.

Like Heaven's image in the smiling brook.
CAMPBELL Theodric st. 14.

3. A natural resemblance; also, that which resembles something; counterpart; likeness; as, the child is the very image of her mother. 4. Psychol. (1) A picture produced in the mind by the representative or imaging power; also, a product of the reproductive imagination; an old form for an image. See IMAGE, vt., 3.

Mr. Galton and Prof. Huxley have made one step in advance in exploding the ridiculous theory of Hume and Berkeley that we have no images but of words and abstract things.
W. JAMES Psychology vol. i, p. 254. [H. H. & CO. 1890.]

(2) The representation of a sense-perception; mental picture; fantasm: originally and more properly applied to the revived mental picture of a visual percept; but also, in present psychological usage, to that of any of the senses, even of the organic sensations. Image, in this meaning of the word, therefore should not be confounded with after-image, which is due to the lingering effect of immediately preceding peripheral stimulation. Compare FANTASY; IMAGINATION.

4. Rhet. & Logic. A metaphor or a simile that reproduces or suggests in words the form, color, aspect, or semblance of an object.

The images which Dante employs speak for themselves.
MACAULAY Essays, Milton p. 6. [a. 1880.]

6. Psychophys. Any mental representation taken, in kind, of a sense-impression which is due to central imitation rather than to adequate peripheral stimulus; as, dermal image, gustatory image, olfactory image, haptical image, etc. See PHRASES. 7. Math. In the representation of imaginary quantities by points on a plane, the point corresponding to any function of the quantity represented by another point. 8. [Rare.] A vivid description in writing or speech. [F., < L. imago, likeness, < √im, in imitor, copy.]

—accidental image, same as AFTER-IMAGE.—dermal i. (Psychol.), the mental representation in kind of a dermal sensation.—electric i., an imaginary system of electrified points on one side of a surface which would have, if it existed, the same effect on the other side as that due to the actual electrification of the surface: used to simplify mathematical treatment, and corresponding to virtual image in optics.—generic i. (Psychol.), a hypothetical composite image supposed to incorporate the resembling elements of similar perceptions, and believed by some psychologists to be the vehicle of all so-called abstract ideas.—gustatory i. (Psychol.), a mental representation, in kind, of any sensation of taste.—haptical i. (Psychol.), a mental representation, in kind, of a sensation of touch.—heteronymous images (Optics), the doubling of an object when the eyes converge for a point farther away than the object.—homonymous images (Optics), the double images of an object formed when the eyes converge for a point nearer than the object. —im'age-break"er, n. One who mutilates or destroys images, especially images set up in churches or temples or used in worship; an iconoclast.—i.-man, n. A hawker of plastic images.—i.-mug, n. A mug or tankard in the form of a human figure.—i.-worship, n. The worship of images, or worship with the aid of images.—kinesthetic i. (Psychol.), a mental representation, in kind, of one or more kinesthetic sensations.—latent i. (Phot.), the image which is recorded on a sensitized photographic plate, or other sensitized medium, by the action of light, but which is not visible until treated with some developing solution.—memory i. (Psychol.), the mental representation, or reproduced mental picture, of any past experience.—multiple images, images formed by reflection and rereflection in two or more mirrors.—negative i., same as AFTER-IMAGE.—olfactory i., the mental representation, in kind, of a sensation of smell. —pure i. (Psychol.), a concrete mental representation or idea, as opposed to a generic idea or concept.—Purkinje's images, three images, due to reflection, seen on the front of the cornea and the surfaces of the crystalline lens (front and back), whose changes in size and position demonstrate that accommodation is chiefly due to the changed convexity of the lens.—Sanson's images, Purkinje's images.

im'age-a-bl(e^P, 1 im'ɪj-ə-bl; 2 ĭm'aġ-a-bl, a. [Rare.] Capable of being represented by an image; imaginable.

im'aged, 1 im'ɪjd; 2 ĭm'aġd, a. Decorated with human figures, as pottery.

im'age-less, 1 im'ɪj-les; 2 ĭm'aġ-lĕs, a. Such as can not be imagined or delineated; devoid of images.

im'ag-er, n. One who images.

im'age-ry, 1 im'ɪj-rɪ; 2 ĭm'aġ-ry (XIII), n. [-RIES, 1 -rɪz; 2 -riṣ, pl.] 1. The act or art of forming images or representations; images collectively; also, an image or a collection of images.

> A casement high and triple-arch'd there was,
> All garlanded with carven imageries
> Of fruits, and flowers. KEATS Eve of St. Agnes st. 24.

2. Rhet. Figurative description in speech; also, the mental images produced by the use of figurative language; as, poetic imagery; rhetorical imagery. Compare IMAGE; IMAGINATION.

> One can understand better the terrible imagery of the Hebrew prophets after seeing the Egyptian deserts. T. L. CUYLER From the Nile to Norway ch. 6, p. 74. [C. & BROS. 1882.]

im-ag'i-na-bl(e^P, 1 im-aj'ɪ-nə-bl; 2 ĭm-ăġ'i-na-bl, a. That can be imagined; as, every imaginable contrivance. [F., < LL. imaginabilis, < L. imaginor; see IMAGINE.] —im-ag"i-na-bil'i-ty, im-ag'i-na-bl(e-ness^P, n.—im-ag'i-na-bly, adv.

im-ag'i-nal, 1 im-aj'ɪ-nəl; 2 ĭm-ăġ'i-nal, a. 1. Entom. Of or pertaining to the imago or perfect state of an insect. 2. [Rare.] Imaginative. 3. Rhet. Given to the use of imagery. [< LL. imaginalis, < L. imago (imagin-); see IMAGE.] —imaginal disks, certain groups of cells arising from and after histolysis, giving rise to new structures in progress to the imaginal stage of insects.

im-ag'i-nant†. I. a. Conceiving; forming ideas. II. n. One who imagines.

im-ag'i-na-ry, 1 im-aj'ɪ-nē-rɪ; 2 ĭm-ăġ'i-nā-ry, a. 1. Existing or occurring only in imagination; fancied; unreal; visionary; as, an imaginary grievance.

> A maxim which has through life been of use to me and may be so to you in preventing such imaginary hurts.
> B. FRANKLIN Autobiography vol. ii, ch. 13, p. 408. [L. 1884.]

2. Math. (1) Denoting quantities or values that involve the square root of a negative quantity, and are therefore unreal in the usual literal sense; as, an imaginary quantity; an imaginary root of an equation. (2) Denoting geometrical concepts involving such a quantity, and therefore non-existent, but which may be named as if existent; as, an imaginary point, curve, or coordinate. Thus, a straight line wholly outside a circle is said to intersect it in two imaginary points, because the algebraic expression for these points may be written, but will involve an imaginary quantity.

> They say that imaginary roots enter into equations by pairs.

Syn.: airy, chimerical, dreamy, fancied, fanciful, hypothetical, ideal, illusive, illusory, quixotic, shadowy, utopian, visionary. See IDEAL.—Ant.: actual, material, palpable, physical, real, realized, substantial, tangible, visible.—imaginary unit, the square foot or —1, commonly represented by the symbol i.—im-ag'i-na-ri-ly, adv.—im-ag'i-na-ri-ness, n.—im-ag"i-na'ri-ty, n.

im-ag'i-na-ry, n. [-RIES, 1 -rɪz; 2 -riṣ, pl.] Alg. An imaginary expression or quantity, as $\sqrt{-1}$.

im-ag'i-nate, 1 im-aj'ɪ-nēt; 2 ĭm-ăġ'i-nāt, vt. [-NAT"ED; -NAT"ING.] 1. To transform to the imaginal stage, as an insect. 2. [Rare.] To imagine.

im-ag"i-na'tion, 1 im-aj"ɪ-nē'shən; 2 ĭm-ăġ"i-nā'shon, n. 1. The act or power of imaging or of reimaging objects of perception or thought; the act or power of combining the products of past experience in modified, new, or ideal forms; the creative or constructive power of the mind. This word has been used in wide and various senses in common life and literature, as well as in the psychological sciences.

> The imagination may be defined to be the use which the Reason makes of the material world. EMERSON Nature, Addresses and Lectures, Nature p. 57. [H. M. & CO. 1889.]

Specif.: (1) The picturing power or act of the mind; the formation of mental images, pictures, or mental representations of objects or ideas, particularly of objects of sense-perception and of mathematical reasoning; also, the reproduction and combination, usually with more or less of modification, of the images or ideas of memory or recalled facts, of experience; imaginative reproduction: embracing fantasy, fancy, and imagination in its common acceptation; as, the imagination rules in reverie and dreams; the imagination of the reveler.

> The lunatic, the lover, and the poet,
> Are of imagination all compact.
> SHAKESPEARE Midsummer-Night's Dream act v, sc. 1.

> This singular power of fabricating images without any foundation in reality, is distinguished by the name of imagination.
> KAMES Elements of Criticism p. 480, app. [M. & L. 1853.]

> That the imagination exercises this function of recombination, has been abundantly illustrated in our previous examples; indeed, this is conceded by all writers. The only error or oversight which we notice is, of those who limit its office entirely to acts of this kind. PORTER Human Intellect pt. ii, p. 356. [S. 1870.]

(2) The mental representation of past knowledges of whatever kind, especially past knowledges of external and sense objects; reimaging power; spontaneous and uncontrolled play of images in consciousness; fantasy.

> Imagination or Phantasy, in its most extensive meaning, is the faculty representative of the phenomena both of the external and internal worlds.
> HAMILTON Philosophy ed. by Wight, pt. ii, p. 247. [A. 1854.]

> First, imagination is often used to denote the general representative function of mind, the power of representing by images, thus including memory and association, as well as the constructive working up of images. Second, the word is often more properly restricted to this last process. J. M. BALDWIN Handbook of Psychol. vol. i, p. 213. [H. M. & CO. 1889.]

(3) The act of constructive intellect in grouping the materials of knowledge or thought into new, original, and rational systems; the constructive or creative faculty: embracing poetic, artistic, philosophic, scientific, and ethical imagination. This sense includes the rational and constructive element of taste or the esthetic faculty. Compare CONSTRUCTION and TASTE, and see synonyms below.

> No special reference has been made to the operations known by such names as Imagination, Creation, Constructiveness, Origination: through which we are supposed to put together new forms, or to construct images, conceptions, pictures, and modes of working, such as we have never before had any experience of.
> BAIN Senses and Intellect bk. iii, p. 570. [A. 1879.]

> The imagination modifies images, and gives unity to variety: it sees all things in one. . . . There is the epic imagination the perfection of which is in Milton; and the dramatic, of which Shakespeare is the absolute master.
> COLERIDGE Table Talk June 23, 1834.

2. Any product of this faculty; a mental image or fantasm, especially of a visible object; an unreal or illusive mental picture or notion; especially, an imaginative construction. 3. An irrational notion, conviction, or belief; as, the imaginations of the insane. 4. Planning, plotting, or scheming, as involving mental construction.

> An heart that deviseth wicked imaginations. Prov. vi, 18.

[F., < L. imaginatio(n-), < imaginor; see IMAGINE.] Syn.: fancy, fantasy. The old psychology treated of the reproductive imagination, which simply reproduces the images that the mind has in any way acquired, and the productive imagination, which modifies and combines mental images so as to produce what is virtually new. To this reproductive imagination President Noah Porter and others gave the name of phantasy or fantasy (many psychologists preferring the former spelling). Phantasy or fantasy, so understood, presents numerous and varied images, often combining them into new forms with exceeding vividness, yet often, also, without any true constructive power, but with the mind adrift, blindly and passively following the laws of association, and with reason and will in torpor; the mental images being perhaps as varied and as vivid, but also as purposeless and unsystematized as the visual images in a kaleidoscope; such fantasy (often loosely called imagination) appears in dreaming, revery, somnambulism, and intoxication. Fantasy in ordinary usage simply denotes capricious or erratic fancy, as appears in the adjective fantastic. Fancy and imagination belong to the so-called productive or more properly the constructive, as well as to the reproductive, power of the mind.

> Although the reproductive and comparative processes enter into the creative imagination, they are subordinate; while the leading process is that of construction according to three laws, of the true (scientific or philosophic imagination), of the beautiful (artistic—including poetic—imagination), and of the good (practical, or inventive construction). These are the very highest acts of which human genius is capable. D. S. GREGORY Outline of Psychology pt. i, bk. ii, p. 51. [R. S. PR.]

> Imagination . . . [depends] less upon casual and outstanding, than upon inherent and internal, properties. WORDSWORTH Poetical Works, Pref. to Ed. of 1815 p. 646, app. [T. & H. 1851.]

So far as actual images are concerned, both fancy and imagination are limited to the materials furnished by the external world; it is remarkable that among all the representations of gods or demigods, fiends and demons, griffins and chimæras, the human mind has never invented one organ or attribute that is not presented in human or animal life; the lion may have a human head and an eagle's wings and claws, but in the various features, individually, there is absolutely nothing new. But imagination can transcend the work of fancy, and compare an image drawn from the external world with some spiritual truth born in the mind itself, or infuse a series of images with such a spiritual truth, molding them as needed for its more vivid expression. Fancy keeps the material object prominent and clear, and works not only with it, but for it; imagination always uses the material objects as the minister of something greater than itself, and often almost loses the object in the spiritual idea with which she has associated it, and for which she values it. Fancy retouches, imagination reconstructs. These distinctions have, perhaps, already been made sufficiently. Fancy sets off, variegates, and decorates; imagination transforms and exalts. Fancy delights; imagination moves. Imagination is not only poetic or literary, but scientific, philosophical, and practical. By imagination the architect sees the unity of a building not yet begun, and the inventor sees the unity and varied interactions of a machine never yet constructed, even a unity that no human eye ever can see, since when the machine is in actual motion, one part may hide the connecting parts, and yet all keep the unity of the inventor's thought. By imagination a Newton sweeps sun, planets, and stars into unity with the earth and the apple that is drawn irresistibly to its surface, and sees them all within the circle of one grand law. Science, philosophy, and mechanical invention have little use for fancy, but the creative, penetrative power of imagination is to them the breath of life, and the condition of all advance and success. See also FANCY; IDEA.—ethical imagination, the imagination as used in framing and developing the ideals of life and conduct.—philosophic i., the imagination as used in reflective thinking, with a view to discover and formulate the underlying and ultimate principles of the physical universe, and of man's nature, history, and destiny.—poetic i., the creative imagination as employed in the production of noble or elevating pictures, or of artistic literary construction, fixed and expressed by rhythmical language.

im-ag"i-na'tion-al, 1 im-aj"ɪ-nē'shən-əl; 2 ĭm-ăġ"i-nā'shon-al, a. Pertaining to, resulting from, or produced or affected by the imagination; imaginary.—im-ag"i-na'tion-al-ism, n. The effect on one's disposition of following the guidance of the imagination; idealism.

im-ag'i-na-tive, } im-ag'i-na-tiv^S, } 1 im-aj'ɪ-nē-tɪv; 2 ĭm-ăġ'i-nā-tiv, a. 1. Having capacity for imagining; given to imagining; producing or creating the things of imagination; creative or constructive; as, he is imaginative rather than logical.

> The Indo-European genius places its highest spiritual life in the imaginative reason. MATTHEW ARNOLD Study Celtic Lit. pt. iv, p. 149. [S. E. & CO. 1867.]

2. Characterized by, produced by, or proceeding from imagination; imaginational; as, imaginative poetry. 3†. Jealous; inquisitive. 4†. Unreal; fancied. [< F. imaginatif, < L. imaginor; see IMAGINE.] im-ag'i-nate†; im-ag'i-nous†. Syn.: see DREAMY; FANCIFUL; ROMANTIC. —im-ag'i-na-tiv(e-ly^S, adv.—im-ag'i-na-tiv(e-ness^S, n.

im-ag'ine, } im-ag'in^S, } 1 im-aj'ɪn; 2 ĭm-ăġ'in, v. [-INED, -IND^S; -IN-ING.] I. t. 1. To form an image of; conceive in the mind; form an idea, notion, or conception of, or to create or construct by the imagination.

> Of course I cannot imagine a thing existing unperceived by any body, but I certainly can conceive it.

im-me'di-a-cy, 1 i-mi'di-a-si; 2 i-mē'di-a-cy, n. 1. The state or quality of being immediate; power to act without dependence; freedom from the intervention of a medium; directness of relation; proximity; closeness. 2. Specif.: (1) In the feudal system, the condition of being next in rank to the suzerain. (2) Metaph. Independent or non-relative existence or being.

It was a natural consequence of the importance which the free citizens had reached, and of their immediacy, that they were admitted to a place in the diets.

HALLAM Middle Ages p. 238. [ʀ. 1854.]

im-me'di-al, 1 im'di-al; 2 i-mē'di-al, a. Dyeing. Acting directly upon goods, as a dye.

im-me'di-ate, 1 i-mē'di-ɪt; 2 ĭ-mē'di-at, a. 1. Following without the lapse of appreciable time; done or occurring at once; instant; as, an immediate reply. 2. Separated by no appreciable space; very near; close; as, immediate contact; in the immediate vicinity.

The immediate neighborhood of Yokohama is beautiful.
1. L. Bird, Unbeaten Tracks, Yeda in vol. i, p. 38. [G. p. c. 1881.]

3. Acting or acted upon without the intervention of anything between cause and object; not dependent upon a medium or any intermediate agency or action; direct; not remote: opposed to mediate; as, the immediate objects of perception; immediate knowledge. 4. Of or pertaining to a direct perception; intuitive; as, immediate truths; immediate certainty.

Philosophers admit that the knowledge of our present mental state is immediate. HAMILTON Metaph. xxiv, p. 329. [G. & L. 1859.]
[< IM-[2] + LL. mediatus; see MEDIATE.]

Syn.: close, contiguous, direct, instant, next, present, proximate.—Ant.: distant, far, future, remote.—immediate vassal, in the feudal system, a vassal holding his fief directly from the suzerain.—im-me'di-ate-ness, n. 1. The state of being immediate. 2. Immediatism.—im-me'di-a-tism, n. 1. The quality of being immediate. 2. U. S. Hist. The principles of the immediatists.—im-me'di-a-tist, n. A person who urges immediate action; specif. [I-] (U. S. Hist.), an abolitionist who urged immediate emancipation.

im-me'di-ate-ly, 1 i-mē'di-ɪt-li; 2 ĭ-mē'di-at-ly, adv. 1. In an immediate manner. (1) Without lapse of time; instantly; at once.

Effects will not, indeed, immediately disappear with their causes. COLERIDGE Works, Friend in vol. ii, p. 68. [B. 1853.]

(2) Without the intervention of anything as a medium; proximately; intuitively; directly. 2. As soon as: a conjunctival and elliptical use.

Syn.: at once, directly, forthwith, instanter, instantly, now, presently, right away, right off, straightway, this instant, without delay. The strong and general human tendency to procrastination is shown in the progressive weakening of the various words in this group. Immediately primarily signifies without the intervention of anything as a medium, hence without the intervention of any, even the briefest, interval or lapse of time. By and by, which was once a synonym, has become an antonym. Directly, meaning at some (perhaps remote) future time. Directly, which once meant with no intervening time, now means after some little while; presently as it once meant now, at the very present, but before very long. Even immediately is sliding from its instantaneousness, so that we are fain to substitute at once, instantly, oh, no, when we would express the emphatic. Right away and right off are vigorous conversational expressions in the United States.

im'mer-gnase', n. Same as EMARGINATION.

im-mer'fect, n. Lack of workmanship.—im-mer'fect-ed, a. Unperfected.—im-mer'fect-ous†, a. Undeserving.

im'mer-man, 1 im'er-mən; 2 im'er-mĭn, Karl Lebrecht (ä'ȧl-lĕb'-ĕ-rĭsht). A German poet, dramatist, and novelist.

im-merse', 1 i-mûrs'; 2 i-mĕrs', v. I. t. [IM-MERSED'; IM-MERS'ING.] 1. To plunge or dip entirely under water or other fluid.

When food cannot be swallowed, life may be prolonged by immersing the body in nutritive fluids.
SPENCER Biology vol. i, pt. ii, ch. 3, p. 165. [A. 1891.]

2. To involve or absorb deeply; overwhelm; engross; as, immersed in study. 3. To baptize by immersion.
II. i. [Rare.] To plunge oneself; become absorbed.
[< L. immersus, pp. of immergo; see IMMERGE.]

Syn.: bury, dip, douse, duck, immerge, plunge, sink, submerge. Dip is Saxon, while immerse is Latin for the same initial act; dip is accordingly the more popular and commonplace, immerse the more elegant and dignified expression in many cases. To speak of baptism by immersion as dipping now seems rude, the entirely proper and usual in early English. Baptists now universally use the word immerse. To dip and to immerse alike signify to bury or submerge some object in a liquid; but dip implies that the object dipped is at once removed from the liquid, while immerse is wholly silent as to the removal. Immerse also suggests more absolute completeness of the action; one may dip his sleeve or dip a sponge in a liquid, if he but touches the edge; if he immerses it, he completely sinks it under, and covers it with the liquid. Submerge implies that the object can not readily be removed, if at all; as, a submerged wreck. To plunge is to immerse suddenly and violently, for which douse and duck are colloquial terms. Dip is used, also unlike the other words, to denote the putting of a hollow vessel into a liquid in order to remove a portion of it; in this sense we say dip up, dip out. See DRENCH; BROWN. Compare synonyms for BURY.—Prep.: in.—im-mers'a-bl(e', im-mers'i-bl(e', a.

im-mersed', 1 i-mûrst'; 2 i-mĕrst', pa. pat. & pa. pt. Growing entirely under water; submitted to or covered by the surrounding parts. 3. Astron. Eclipsed; plunged in darkness.

im-mer'sion, 1 i-mûr'shən; 2 i-mĕr'shon, n. 1. The act of immersing, or the state of being immersed; specif., baptism by submersion in water.

The ordinance of baptism is to be administered by the immersion of the body in water.
F. WAYLAND Principles of Baptists p. 87. [BR. & CO. 1857.]

2. The state of being overwhelmed or deeply engaged; absorption; as, immersion in business. 3. Astron. The disappearance of a heavenly body, either by passing behind another or by passing into the shadow of the earth. [< LL. immersio(n-), < L. immersus; see IMMERSE.]—center of immersion (Naut.), the center of buoyancy.—im-mer'sion-ist', n. One who is of an immersion system.—system (Micros.), the interposition of a liquid, as water or oil, between the front surface of the objective and the object or its covering glass, which corrects the loss of light caused by passing from the glass and allows the object to be held at a greater distance from the eye than a dry objective, admitting also of a longer range of penetrating power.

im-mer'sion-ism, 1 i-mûr'shən-izm; 2 i-mĕr'shon-ĭsm, n. 1. The theological doctrine of immersion. 2. The custom of baptizing by immersion.

im-mer'sion-ist, 1 i-mûr'shən-ist; 2 i-mĕr'shon-ĭst, n. An adherent of the doctrine of baptism by immersion.

im'mi-grant, 1 im'i-grənt; 2 im'i-grant, n. One who or that which immigrates; specif., a foreigner who enters a country to settle. Compare EMIGRANT.

The immigrant, on arriving, found himself a stranger, in a strange land, far from friends. U. S. GRANT Personal Memoirs vol. i, ch. 2, p. 31. [C. & W. 1885.]

im'mi-grate, 1 im'i-grēt; 2 im'i-grāt, vi. [-GRAT'ED; -GRAT'ING.] To come into a country to settle as a colonist or foreign from a former habitat, especially a native land, specif., to move into a country for the purpose of settlement. 2. Physiol. To pass from their customary seat to another of the blood-cells or cells that have escaped from the blood to extravascular regions. SEE DIAPEDESIS.
[< L. immigratus, pp. of immigro; see IMMIGRANT.]
Syn.: see EMIGRATE.—im'mi-gra'tion, n. 1. The act of immigrating; entrance of a settler or settlers from a foreign country.

In the present century the immigration of a large foreign population has had a powerful influence on the condition of Ireland.
LECKY Eng. in Eighteenth Cent. vol. ii, ch. 5, p. 1. [A. 1888.]

2. The total number of aliens entering a country for permanent residence during a specified period.—im'mi-gra'tor, n. [Rare.] An immigrant.—im'mi-gra-to'ry, a.

im'mi-nence, 1 im'i-nens; 2 im'i-nĕns, n. 1. The state or quality of being imminent; nearness, as of threatening or calamity; danger. 2. Impending evil or calamity. [< L. imminentia, < imminen(t-)s, ppr. of immineo, overhang, < in, on, + minor, project.]

im'mi-nent, 1 im'i-nent; 2 im'i-nĕnt, a. 1. Threatening to happen at once, as some calamity; dangerous and close at hand; impending; as, imminent peril. 2. [Archaic.] Overhanging as if about to fall: often followed by upon.

Imminent upon the precipice of war.
Lowell Ode to Happy Valley st. 3, p. 3.

3†. Giving close attention: with upon. 4†. Immanent; a confused use. [< L. imminen(t-)s; see IMMINENCE.]

Syn.: impending, threatening. Imminent, from the Latin, with the same primary meaning, signifies that which is ready to happen at once, as some calamity. Impending, also from the Latin, with the sense of hanging over, is closely akin to imminent, but suggests somewhat less urgency. Imminent is more immediate, impending more remote, threatening more contingent. An impending evil is almost sure to happen at some uncertain time; an imminent peril is one liable to befall very speedily; a threatening peril may be near or remote, but always with hope that it may be averted.—Ant.: chimerical, contingent, doubtful, improbable, problematical, unexpected, unlikely.—im'mi-nent-ly, adv.

im-min'gle, w. [Rare.] To mix in or together.

im-mis'ci-bl(e', 1 im-mis'i-bl; 2 im-mĭs'i-bl, a. Not capable of mixing homogeneously; separating, as oil and water. — im-mis'a-bl(e'.— im-mis'ci-bil'i-ty, n.

There are numerous cases in chemistry where immiscible fluids are to be separated from each other.
FARADAY Chemical Manipulation § 9, ¶ 557, p. 262. [C. & L. 1831.]

im-mis'sion, 1 im-mish'ən; 2 ĭm-mĭsh'on, n. 1. The act of immitting or sending in, or that which is immitted; injection: opposed to emission. 2. Ecol. Same as COMMIXTURE, 4. 3. The object immitted. [< L. immissio(n-), < immissus, pp. of immitto; see IMMIT.]

im'mis-si'bl-ty, 1 im'mi-si'bi-ti; 2 ĭm'mĭ-sĭ'bĭl-ty, n. Ability to absorb radiation: opposed to emissivity. [< IM-[2] + MISSIVE.]

im-mit', 1 im-mit'; 2 ĭm-mĭt', vt. [Rare.] To send in; inject: opposed to emit. [< L. immitto, < in-, into, + mitto, send.]

im-mod'er-ate, 1 im-mod'ər-at; 2 ĭm-mŏd'er-at, a. Not moderate; exceeding just or customary bounds; extravagant; excessive; as, immoderate demands, ambition, or grief. [< L. immoderatus, < in-, not, + moderatus; see MODERATE.] Syn.: excessive, exorbitant, extravagant, inordinate, immoderate, unreasonable, violent.—Ant.: see synonyms for MODERATE.—im-mod'er-ate-ly, adv. Beyond the bounds of moderation.—im-mod'er-ate-ness, n.

im-mod'er-a-tion, 1 im-mod'ər-ē'shən; 2 ĭm-mŏd'er-ā'-shon, n. 1. Want of moderation. 2. pl. Excesses; intemperate acts.

im-mod'est, 1 im-mod'est; 2 ĭm-mŏd'ĕst, a. 1. Wanting in the reserve or restraint that decency requires; wanting in decency and delicacy. Specif.: (1) Indelicate or impure; as, an immodest thought or suggestion. (2) Not chaste; sensual: lewd: said of persons. (3) Bold; forward. [Rare.] Obscene. 2. Not restrained by a sense of propriety or humility; forward; pretentious; impudent.

The young people of this day desire to be painted first as proud-saying. How grand I am; not as humble-saying, How beautiful I am. RUSKIN Art of England lect. iii, p. 104. [G. A. 1884.]

3. [Archaic.] Not limited to due bounds; immoderate. < L. immodestus, < in-, not; and see MODEST.] Syn.: bold, brazen, coarse, forward, gross, impure, indecent, indecorous, indelicate, lewd, obscene, shameless, unchaste, wanton. Compare synonyms for CHASTE; see synonyms for MODEST; PURE.—im-mod'est-ly, adv.

im-mod'es-ty, 1 im-mod'es-ti; 2 ĭm-mŏd'ĕs-ty, n. The state of being immodest. (1) Lack of refinement or decency; indelicacy or unchastity. (2) Lack of humility; forwardness; presumptuousness. Syn.: see INDECENCY.

im-mod'u-lat'ed, 1 im-mod'yu-lēt'ed; 2 ĭm-mŏd'yu-lāt'ed, Devoid of vocal modulation; harsh.

im'mo-late, 1 im'o-lēt; 2 ĭm'o-lāt, vt. [-LAT'ED; -LAT'-ING.] To offer, as upon an altar or in sacrifice; kill or make an offering of for sacrificial purposes. [< L. immolatus, pp. of immolo, offer as a sacrificial meal, < in, on, + mola, meal.] — im'mo-la'tor, n. One who immolates.

im'mo-la'tion, 1 im'o-lē'shən; 2 ĭm'o-lā'shon, n. 1. The act of immolating, or the state of being immolated; sacrifice. 2. That which is immolated or sacrificed. 3. Same as ILLATION. 4. A ceremony performed in the sacrifices of the Romans. [< L. immolatio(n-), < immolatus; see IMMOLATE.]

im'mo-men'tous, a. [Rare.] Of no moment; unimportant; trifling. im-mo'ment†.

im-mor'al, 1 im-mor'al; 2 ĭm-mŏr'al, a. 1. Inconsistent with moral rectitude; violating the moral or divine law; morally wrong; specif., contrary to purity.

The old Prometheus myth which Æschylus makes the groundwork of his tragedy was immoral, and he tries to represent the Supreme Zeus as treating the Titan arbitrarily and unjustly.

Scott Heart of Mid-Lothian p. 448. [r. 1855.]

2. The act of charging or calling to account, as for crime or misdemeanor; especially, the accusation and arraignment of a high civil officer before a proper tribunal. In the United States a resolution for impeachment of the President must originate in the House of Representatives, and the trial must take place before the Senate. In England the House of Commons and House of Lords respectively have corresponding functions. The process of presenting criminals originated in the Good Parliament of 1376 and was first employed in the case of Lord Latimer, but it is now practically obsolete in Great Britain, no use of it having been made since 1806. In the United States of the Unified Empire the lower house also impeaches, while the Senate is the trial court.

The President, Vice-President, and all Civil officers of the United States, shall be removed from office on impeachment for and conviction of treason, bribery or other high crimes and misdemeanors. Constitution of the United States of U. S. art. ii, s. 4.

im-ped'i-ment, 1 im-ped'i-mənt or -mənt; 2 im-pĕd'i-ment, n. That which hinders or impedes; especially, that which ought to hinder; a legal obstruction; as, an impediment on the road; an impediment in one's speech.

If any of you know cause, or just impediment why these two persons should not be joined together in holy Matrimony, ye are to declare it. Book of Common Prayer, Matrimony.

Syn.: bar, barrier, clog, difficulty, encumbrance, hindrance, obstacle, obstruction. Difficulty makes an undertaking otherwise than easy. That which resists one as a burden is an encumbrance. An impediment is primarily something that checks the foot, an obstacle is something that stands across the way, an obstruction something that is built or placed across the way. An obstruction is always an obstacle, but an obstacle may not always be properly termed an obstruction; boxes and bales placed on the sidewalk are obstructions to travel; an ice-floe is an obstacle to the progress of navigation. A hindrance (kindred with hind, behind) is anything that makes one come behind or short of his purpose, as impediment may be either what is in his way or what he carries with him; impedimenta was the Latin name for the baggage of a soldier or of an army. The tendency is to view an impediment as something impressing himself, or difficulty as holding the attention of restless children. An encumbrance is always what one carries with him; an obstacle or an obstruction is always without. To a marching soldier the steepness of a mountain path is a difficulty, loose stones are impediments, a fence is an obstruction, a cliff or a boulder across the way is an obstacle; a knapsack is an encumbrance.—ANT.: aid, assistance, benefit, help, relief, succor.—absolute impediment (Law), a condition which makes it impossible for a person to contract a valid marriage.—diriment i., see under DIRIMENT.—prohibitive i. (Law), an obstacle under which persons who have contracted marriage are subject to punishment for having done so.—relative i. (Law), a state of facts which on any people of a certain degree of consanguinity from contracting marriage with each other, as a brother with a sister.

3. Bot. Lacking some essential part or member, as a flower lacking either stamens or the pistil. 4. Gram. Indicating past action as uncompleted, continuous, or synchronous with some other action, as, the imperfect tense: distinguished from aorist, perfect, etc.
The past tense expresses action as belonging to past time; as, He went to town yesterday; The king was powerful. . . . Many grammarians have called the past tense the imperfect tense because it does not express the completeness of action at any definite time. But it seems better to name the tense from the less frequent use, which expresses than from its particular manner of expressing that time.
J. C. FERNALD A Working Grammar pp. 121, 123. [p. & w. '03.]

im-pe'ri-al-ism,] im-pi'ri-al-izm;] im-pē'ri-al-ĭzm, n. 1. Imperial sway, character, authority, or spirit; also, its advocacy. 2. The system of imperial government; ambition to form an empire; a policy of territorial extension. Specif., in the United States, designating the principles and aims of the Imperial Federation Committee established in 1893, which invited the colonies to take a share in the cost of imperial defense, and urged the establishment of a council of the Empire to deal with questions of defense and foreign policy. (2) In the United States, designating a state of accepted facts that has arisen since the war with Spain in 1898, which results in the establishment of political ties between the United States and territory beyond the seas. For a time it was a debated issue, but a limited imperialism, aiming at maintaining the populous and the heavily acquired countries into self-government, has been almost universally accepted, and this involves a participation in world politics, always, however, avoiding whatever policy or advice to avoid entangling alliances. (3) In France, designating the spirit of the Napoleonic empire, or advocacy of it or of its revival. (4) In the German states, policy or practise of extending the imperium or central authority and control over races and peoples living outside of the nation's natural boundaries, especially when this is done without giving to such races and peoples any share in the central government.

im-pres'sion-ism, 1 im-presh'an-izm; 2 Im-prĕsh'on-ĭsm, n. 1. Art. A form of realism which aims to preserve the vividness and force of the first impression nature makes on the painter's vision and to convey the sensation of movement and light. In opposition to academic rules and traditions, it excludes preciseness of form, modeling, unnecessary detail, and completeness of finish. From their habit of working in open air, these artists endeavors to render color in strong daylight, the French disciples of impressionism early gained the appellations plein-airists and luminists. To their number was added a group of painters (naturalistic impressionists, or pointillists) who, observing color-laws, placed points or touches of pure, bright pigment side by side, attaining the effect (their work viewed at a distance) of mingled and softened color such as earlier painters got by the mixture of pigments. The founder of impressionism was Édouard Manet, but the true leader and theorist of the school was Claude Monet. A picture by him labeled "Impression" was exhibited in Paris about 1860; but the term impressionism did not come into general use before 1867. Among names associated with this form of art are those of Renoir, Pissarro, Sisley, Cézanne, Raffaelli, and Seurat; in America, J. Alden Weir and John F. Twachtman. Impressionism influenced Whistler, Bastien-Lepage, and many others, and it has been far-reaching in its effect, especially in illustration. See NEO-IMPRESSIONISM; POST-IMPRESSIONISM.

Impressionism should mean all that genre of art . . . which hastily and simply tries to render in form and color what the artist sees, as he sees it, when his eye has been sharpened and trained to signify something much more transient — the reproduction of what is seen at a particularly rapid glance.

C. F. KEARY Dublin Review April 1898, p. 630.

In all safe reason He must have some attendants. SHAKESPEARE Cymbeline act iv, sc. 2.

11. Denoting the object as determining kind, manner, degree, measure, or distribution; as, ten feet in length; he moved in a straight line; in fact; in reality.

Among the trees in pairs they rose. MILTON P. L. bk. vii, l. 459.

12. Denoting condition; as, written in German; painted in water-colors. 13. [Ir.] (1) Implying identity with an individual or an article; as, the grain went to the mill in corn and came back in flour. (2) Implying existence: usually with it.

Only for the day that's in it [Sunday], I'd make you laugh at the wrong side of your mouth. JOYCE English as We Speak It in Ireland p. 25. [L. G. & CO. '10.]

14. [Dial. or Obs.] At; for; on; during; as, in a winter night; he remained in a month; I had not seen him in years. 15†. Denoting action, or the action or treatment to which something is subjected: used with verbal nouns in the same way as the preposition a; as, the ship was in building; to go in hunting. [< AS. in.]
In and into are often confused. In denotes position, state, etc.; into, tendency, direction, destination, etc.; as, "I throw the stone into the water, and it lies in the water." It is not uncommon to find such misuse even by reputable writers; as, "I divide these pleasures in (for into) two kinds"; "To keep stragglers into (for in) line." "Come in the house" is a colloquialism. The proper expression is always "Come into the house." But where no object is expressed, we say "come in," "go in." Faith, confidence, trust, and the like are viewed as reaching from the one exercising them, and resting in the one toward whom they are exercised. Hence we speak of putting confidence in one.
Syn.: see AT.— in as much as, see INASMUCH.— in that [Archaic], for the reason that; because; as, in that ye have sinned, repent.— in the name of. 1. By the color or authority of; as, this wrong was done in the name of justice: also used in invective, adjuration, etc. 2. In the character or spirit of; as, ask in the name of Christ.— in the wind's eye (Naut.), directly against the wind.— to be in for it. 1. To be desirous of a particular thing or committed to a given course 2. [Colloq.] To have no means of avoiding or escaping something, as punishment.— to be in it [Slang], to be engaged in or connected with as a participant, especially a successful or favored one: commonly in the negative; as, they had a good time, but I was not in it; after the first few minutes of the race he was not in it.— to be or keep in with. [Colloq.] 1. To be intimate or in favor with. 2. To be or keep close to; as, to keep a vessel in with the shore.

in-¹, prefix. In; into; on; within; against; upon; toward. It often expresses continued motion, and is sometimes intensive and at other times imparts no emphasis. During the 14th century and later there was a tendency to change the prefix en-, in words derived from the Latin, back to the original form in-. Hence, at the present time there are words using the two prefixes synonymously, as enclose and inclose. Sometimes they are used with a distinction, as ensure and insure. As a rule, in- is used with the words derived from the Latin and en- with those from the French; but there are many exceptions. [1, < AS. in-, < in, in. 2, < OF. in-, en-, < L. in-, < in, in.]

The n of both in-¹ and in-² changes to m before b and p, and into the liquid that immediately follows it, as il, im, ir, as in *il*lumine, *im*bue, *im*merse, *im*peril, *ir*rational.
The following is a list of unimportant or self-defining words, most of which are merely variants of words beginning with un-. In all cases in- as here used has the meaning of 'want or lack of' (as incoalescence, lack of coalescence), with the change of definitive form required for adjectives and adverbs (as indevout, not devout; inexpectedly, in an unexpected manner). Words beginning with in- not found in the list are given in the vocabulary. For respellings not given below, see the primitive words.

-in¹, suffix. Used (1) in adjectives of Greek or Latin origin, meaning pertaining to, and (2) in nouns of Latin origin. [(1) < F. -in, -ine, < L. -inus, -ina, -inum, or < Gr. -inos, -inē, -inon, an adj. termination. (2) < L. -ina, termination of fem. abstract nouns.]

-in², suffix. Used (1) as a termination of feminine nouns, and (2) in chemistry and mineralogy, forming names of derivatives and of some elements. Formerly chemical societies adopted the ending -in for neutral compounds, such as albumin, and -ine for basic compounds and alkaloids, as conine; but now this distinction is not adhered to. [< L. -ina, or Gr. -inē, prop. fem. of L. -inus, Gr. -inos; see -IN¹.]

In. Indium: a chemical symbol.

I'na², n. Same as INE.

-ina¹, suffix. Zool. A termination used in the formation of various animal group-names. [L., neut. pl. of -inus; see -IN¹.]

-ina², suffix. A termination of feminine nouns to denote (1) titles, and (2) Christian names; as, Czar*ina*, Christ*ina*. [< L. -ina, fem. of -inus, -IN¹.]

[< L. incandesco; see INCANDESCENT.] — in"can-des'cence, n. The state of being incandescent. in"can-des'cen-cy†. Syn.: see LIGHT.

in"can-des'cent, a. In 'kan-des'ĕnt; ɪ̈n 'cən-dēs'ĕnt, a. 1. Made luminous by heat; white or glowing with heat.

Many persons have rashly concluded that the earth is essentially an incandescent liquid mass, covered with a comparatively thin shell of 30 miles.

LE CONTE Geology pt. 1, p. 121. [A.]

2. Of or pertaining to a lamp the light of which is derived from incandescing material such as the filament in an incandescent electric lamp or the mantle in a Welsbach burner. William E. Sawyer, in his "Electric Lighting by Incandescence," says that the earliest attempt is believed an incandescent carbon conductor was made by Starr, an Englishman, in 1845 (Patent No. 10,919). Shepard in 1850 and Roberts in 1859 invented incandescent carbon lamps (Patents Nos. 13,-302 and 14,198). At Salem, Mass., in July 1859 Farmer lighted his parlor by two incandescent platinum lamps.

Incandescent Electric Lamp.

[< L. incandescent (t-) s, ppr. of incandesco, grow hot, < in, in, + candesco, become hot, < candeo, glow.] — incandescent elec-tric lamp, an enclosed glass globe, ex- f, hub; a, filament; b, platinum connecting wires; d, support; e, hub; f tip. hausted of air, containing a filament of high resistance and of refractory nature attached to conducting wires passing through and sealed into the glass: invented by Thomas A. Edison in 1879. In practical use, the carbon or metallic filament forms part of a continuous electrical circuit in which the lamp is placed, and because of its resistance to the passage of the electric current the electrical energy is transformed into heat sufficiently great to raise the filament to incandescence, thus causing it to emit light. For convenience and adaptability to commercial use, the conducting wires are soldered to separated metallic parts at the base of the lamp. (See illus.) Osmium, tantalum, and tungsten are now used in various forms as the principal elements entering into the construction of filaments. See ELECTRIC LIGHT, under ELECTRIC.— in"can-des'cent-ly, adv.

In"ca-nes'cent, ɪn"ka-nes'ĕnt; ɪ̈n"ca-nēs'ĕnt, a. Bot. Presenting a gray or hoary appearance; canescent. [< L. incanescen(t)-s, ppr. of incanesco, grow gray, < in, in, + canesco, become gray, < canus, white.]

in-ca'nous, ɪ n-kā'nus; ɪ̈n-cā'nus, a. Canescent; hoary; whiter than incanescent. [< L. incanus, < in, in, + canus, gray.]

in"can-ta'tion, ɪ n"kan-tā'shən, n. The saying or singing of magical words for enchantment or exorcism; also, the magical formula or ceremony so employed; hence, by extension, any magic or conjuration. [< LL. incantatio(n-), < L. incanto; see ENCHANT.] — in'can-ta'tor, n. One who practises incantation.— in-can'ta-to-ry, a.— in-can'ting, a. Enchanting.

in'come,] in'kum; 2 in'cŏm, n. 1. The amount of money coming to a person or corporation within a specified time or regularly (when unqualified, annually), whether as payment for services, interest, or profit from investment; revenue.

He alone is rich, whose income is more than he uses. W. HONE Every-Day Book, Our Lives in vol. iii, col. 346. [R. T. 1833.]

2. Theory. Econ. Revenue; the advantages enjoyed by a given community, either in the form of goods or services, during a stated period, as a rule one year, as opposed to the totality of goods in existence at a given moment. The use of the word income in an effort to apply the same principles of mensuration to the wealth of a nation as are usually applied to that of individuals; it involves great difficulties. The income of a nation is exceedingly difficult to estimate, from its inherent fluctuation, whereas that of an individual can be determined with considerable accuracy.

3. [Rare.] Advent; beginning; the act of coming in; an incoming; specif., the influx of divine grace into the soul. 4. [Rare.] One who or that which comes in; comer; specif., in Scotland, an ailment or disease that comes on suddenly without apparent cause. 5. Physiol. Matter introduced into the body as food, specifically that which is assimilated; ingested aliment. 6†. An entrance-fee.—gross income, the entire receipts or revenue derived from a business, investment, property, etc., before any expenditures, such as payment of taxes, wages, insurance, etc., are made out of it.—1. account (Finance), the revenue side of a statement of receipts and disbursements; receipts and disbursements under the heads of gross earnings, operating expenses, net earnings, disbursements for taxes, interest, dividends, and rentals (Finance), and the proportion that the interest or dividend on a security bears to its actual cost; thus, a stock paying 4 per cent. on par value, bought at 80, is set on a 5 per cent. income basis.—i. tax, a fee levied upon the income or profits of individuals. In England income tax was first imposed in 1799, and it has been levied steadily since 1842. By the Finance Bill of 1921 all incomes above a fixed minimum are taxed on a graduated scale, approximating 12 shillings to the pound on certain incomes over £100,000. A differentiation is made between earned and unearned incomes. By legislation in 1923, a reduction was made from the figures given above. In the United States an income tax was adopted in 1812 and from 1862 to 1872. It was carried as part of the Wilson Tariff Bill in 1894, but declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. On Feb. 25, 1913, an amendment to the Constitution was ratified, hence the present income tax law. The law provides such a tax. By the United States Revenue Act of 1926 a further number of reductions were made in the rates imposed. By the law of 1926 the normal tax for individuals was put at 1½ per cent. on net incomes of from $4,000 to $7,500. A State income tax is levied by a few States.—net i., the residue of the gross income from any business, property, etc., after all operating expenses have been paid.

—in-com"pre-hen'si-bil'i-ty, n. The quality of being beyond the grasp of human intellect; incomprehensibleness.—in-com"pre-hen'si-bl(e-ness)†.—in-com"pre-hen'si-bly, adv.

A being that can not be fully grasped or comprehended by the human intellect, and which is infinite and infinite, in the Athanasian Creed.—in-com"pre-hen'si-ble, adv.

in-com"pre-hen'sion, n. Lack of understanding.

in-com"pre-hen'sive,] 1 in-kom'pri-hen'siv; 2 in-cŏm'pre-hĕn'siv,] a. Not comprehensive; limited; restricted.

in"com-press't-bl(e), a. Incapable of being compressed; resisting all attempts to reduce volume by pressure: distinguished from rigid bodies, capable of such.

From the experiment of the Florentine Academicians, liquids were for a long time regarded as being completely incompressible. Since then researches have been made by many distinguished physicists, which have shown that liquids are really compressible.
GANOT Physics tr. by Atkinson, bk. iii, p. 86. [W. w. 1890.]

in"com-press't-bil'i-ty, n. The state or quality of being incompressible. in"com-press't-bl(e-ness)†.— absolute incompressibility, see IMPENETRABILITY, 2.

in"con-ceiv'a-bl(e),] in'kon-sē'və-bl; 2 in'cŏn-sēv'a-bl, a. 1. That can not be conceived by the mind; incomprehensible; beyond human understanding; hence, sometimes, incredible; impossible. 2. Philos. (1) Inherently contradictory; as in the case of the judgment that God is at once perfect and imperfect, in the same meaning of the terms. (2) Involving the violation of the established order of nature; as, perpetual motion is inconceivable. (3) Beyond the power of man mentally to picture or image, as the word is used in the Spencerian philosophy. (4) Appearing not creditable or highly improbable to the individual: so J. S. Mill.

The foregoing definitions of what is or is not to be taken determined by the several theories as to the limits, nature, and tests, of thought and knowledge.—in"con-ceiv'a-bil'i-ty, in"con-ceiv'a-ble-ness, n. inconceivability of the negative or opposite (Metaph.), the theory formulated by Spencer that if, of two opposite propositions, one is inconceivable, the other is necessarily true.—in"con-ceiv'a-bly, adv.

in"con-cin'ni-ty,] in'kon-sin'i-ti; 2 in"cŏn-cĭn'i-ty, n. [Lack of harmony or fitness; incongruity; disproportion. [< L. inconcinnitā(t-)s, < inconcinnus, awkward, < in-, not, + concinnus, well adjusted.]

in"con-clu'sive,] in'kon-klū'siv; 2 in'cŏn-clu'siv (XIII), in"con-clu'sive,] a. 1. Not reaching or affording any ultimate conclusion; not finally settling a point or question in debate; indeterminate; indecisive; as, inconclusive reasoning; inconclusive evidence. 2. Not reaching any definite result; ineffective; as, inconclusive efforts. Syn.: see ABSURD.—in"con-clu'sion, n. [Rare.] Lack of conclusion or decision; inconclusiveness.—in"con-clu'sive-ly, adv. In an inconclusive manner; testimonely.

They stood inconclusively a moment, as if they would both be glad of something more to say.
HOWELLS Dr. Breen's Practice p. 102. [O. & CO. 1881.]

in"con-coct'ed†, a. Not fully concocted or digested; immature. in"con-coct'ive†, a. Indigestible.

in"con-cur'ring, a. [Rare.] Not concurring or agreeing.

in"con-di'tion-al†, a. Unconditional.

in"con-form'i-ty, n. Nonconformity; disagreeing.—in"con-gē'nial, a. [Rare.] Uncongenial.—in"con-ge"ni-al'i-ty, n. [Incongruity.

in-con'gru-ence,] 1 in-kon'gru-ens; 2 in-cŏn'gru-ĕns, n. in-con'gru-ent,] 1 in-kon'gru-ent; 2 in-cŏn'gru-ĕnt, a. 1. Having natures not well matched or fitted for each other; incongruous; also, sometimes, logically incompatible, incongruous. 2. Not corresponding in shape or curvature; as, incongruent surfaces in a joint. 3. Math. Giving different remainders when divided by a modulus: said of numbers. [< L. incongruen(t-)s, < in-, not; and see CONGRUENT.]—in-con'gru-en-t-ly, adv.

in-con'gru-i-ty,] in'kon-gru'i-ti; 2 in'cŏn-gru'i-ty (XIII), n. [-TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tis, pl.] 1. The state or quality of being incongruous; lack of harmony, fitness, or adaptation, especially among things that should be well fitted or adapted to one another; inappropriateness; unsuitableness; inconsistency.

The tragic incongruity arises from the disproportion between the world and the soul of man.
DOWDEN Shakspere, His Mind and Art p. 351. [E. & CO. 1876.]

2. That which is incongruous; something not suitably adapted to another thing, or made up of parts not fitted to one another.

The Aztec character was perfectly original and unique. It was made up of incongruities apparently irreconcilable.

Prescott Mexico vol. i. p. 188. [n. 1857.]

3. Logical incompatibility: an improper use.

in-con'gru-ous, 1 in-kŏŋ'gru-us; 2 ĭn-cŏŋ'gru-ŭs, a. 1. Not congruous; not fitting well together; not adapted to each other or to some position or some associated thing; unsuitable for the time, place, or occasion; out of place or character; incongruent.

Festus: I hear A strain incongruous as a merry dirge, Or sacramental bacchanal might be. BAILEY Festus, Hell sc. 23.

2. Composed of inharmonious elements or disconnected parts; as, an incongruous sermon. 3. Inconsistent; incompatible: an incorrect logical use. 4. Math. Not having congruence. [< L. incongruus, < in-, not; and see CONGROUOUS.] SYN.: absurd, conflicting, contradictory, contrary, discordant, discrepant, ill-matched, inapposite, inappropriate, incompatible, inconsistent, inharmonious, irreconcilable, mismated, repugnant, unsuitable. Two or more things that do not fit well together, or are not adapted to each other, are said to be incongruous; a thing is said to be incongruous that is not adapted to the time, place, or occasion; the term is also applied to a thing made up of ill-assorted parts or inharmonious elements. Discordant is applied to all things that jar in association, like musical notes that are not in accord; inharmonious has the same original sense, but is a milder term. Incompatible primarily signifies unable to sympathize or feel alike; inconsistent means unable to stand together. Things are incompatible which can not exist together in harmonious relations, and whose action when associated tends to mutual extinction of one by the other. Inconsistent applies to things that can not be made to agree in thought with each other, or with some standard of truth or right; slavery and freedom are inconsistent with each other in theory, and incompatible in fact. Incongruous applies to relations, unsuitable to purpose or use: two colors are incongruous which can not be agreeably associated; either may be unsuitable for a parlor, a room, or an occasion. Incommensurable is a mathematical term, applying to two or more quantities that have no common measure or aliquot part. See CONTRARY, a.—ANT.: consequent, agreeing, compatible, consistent, harmonious, suitable.— Prep.: with.— in-con'gru-ous-ly, adv.— in-con'gru-ous-ness, n.

in'con-jŭnct'ly, a. Astrol. Not in union or conjunction: said of planets and signs.

in'con-nect'ed, a. [Rare.] Disconnected; unconnected.— in'con-nec'tion, n. [Rare.] Disconnection.

in'con'nu', 1 in'kŏ-nü' or (F.) ĭn-kô-nü'; 2 in'cŏ-nü' or (F.) ăn'co-nü', n. [F.] The Sir John Richardson's salmon (Stenodus mackenzii): so named by the voyageurs who first found it.

in-con'scious, 1 in-kŏn'shŭs; 2 ĭn-cŏn'shŭs, a. 1. Not self-conscious.

The lower and inconscious forms of life.
BROWNING Cleon st. 7.

2†. Unconscious. in-con'scient‡ [Rare].— -ly, adv. [Rare.]

in-con'se-quence, 1 in-kŏn'sē-kwĕns; 2 ĭn-cŏn'sē-kwĕns, n. 1. The character of being inconsequent; the state or condition of not following from the premises or of not proceeding on logical grounds; the use of false reasoning; or action based on such reasoning; lack of just inference; inconclusiveness; inconsistency; as, the inconsequence of a conclusion or of a course of reasoning. 2. That which is inconsequent; a false or illogical inference; as, inconsequences arising from misapprehension. 3. Irrelevancy; lack of consequence; inconsecutiveness. [< L. inconsequentia, < inconsequen(t-)s; see INCONSEQUENT.]

in-con'se-quent, 1 in-kŏn'sē-kwĕnt; 2 ĭn-cŏn'sē-kwĕnt, a. 1. Not according to logical sequence or the law of reason and consequent; contrary to reasonable inference; not employing, resulting from, or proceeding according to logical methods; illogical; unreasonable; inconsistent; as, an inconsequent assertion; an inconsequent advocate.

The inconsequent creature, man,
For that's his specialty, he's unlike else
Conceives the circle, and then walks the square!
E. B. BROWNING Aurora Leigh bk. vii. l. 1,010.

2. Not according to ordinary physical sequence; not being what one would expect; not following according to the usual course, or not resulting in the usual way; eccentric; irrelevant; as, an inconsequent action; an inconsequent man. 3. [Rare.] Of no importance; unworthy of notice. [< L. inconsequen(t-)s, < in-, not; and see CONSEQUENT.]— -ly, adv.— -ness, n.

in-con'se-quen'tial, 1 in-kŏn'sē-kwĕn'shăl; 2 ĭn-cŏn'sē-kwĕn'shăl, a. 1. Characterized by inconsequence; inconsequent, in any one of the senses of inconsequent.

Of all poets that have practiced reasoning in verse, Pope is the one most inconsequential in the deduction of his thoughts.

in'con-sid'er-a-bl(e), 1 in'kŏn-sĭd'er-a-bl; 2 ĭn'cŏn-sĭd'er-a-bl, a. Not worth considering; small in quantity or importance; insignificant; trivial; hence, also, without prominence, rank, or authority; as, an inconsiderable amount of money.— -a-bl(e)-ness†, n.— -a-bly, adv.

For my descent then, I was, as well as you, born to many, of a low and inconsiderable generation.
BEAUMONT & FLETCHER Laws of Candy p. 20. [n. d. c. o. 1874.]

in'con-sid'er-ate, 1 in'kŏn-sĭd'er-ăt; 2 ĭn'cŏn-sĭd'er-ăt, a. 1. Not considerate; regardless of what should be considered; heedless of consequences; inattentive; thoughtless; as, inconsiderate youth; an inconsiderate people. 2. Showing a want of consideration or thought; rash; unconsidered; hasty; as, inconsiderate action. 3†. Inconsiderable. [< L. inconsideratus, < in-, not; and see CONSIDERATE.] SYN.: see BLUFF; IMPRUDENT; INATTENTIVE.— in'con-sid'er-ate-ly, adv.— in'con-sid'er-ate-ness, n.

in'con-sid'er-a'tion, n. Lack of consideration, deliberation, or forethought.

With the unchastened inconsideration of his youth, he plunged into his duties with little preparation.
CHANNING Works, Joseph Tuckerman p. 385. [a. u. a. 1833.]

in'con-sid'ered, a. [Rare.] 1. Same as INCONSIDERATE. 2. Not taken into account; unconsidered.

in'con-sis'ten-cy, 1 in'kŏn-sis'ten-sĭ; 2 ĭn'cŏn-sis'tĕn-cy, n. [-CIES, 1 -sĭz; 2 -cĭş, pl.] 1. The state or quality of being inconsistent. (1) Logical incompatibility; contradiction or contrariety; incompossibility; logical disagreement. (2) Lack of uniformity or coherency in thought, belief, or conduct; self-contradictoriness in statement or mutability in the observance of principles.

2. That which is inconsistent, in any sense, as an opinion, idea, act, or the like. in'con-sist'ence†.

I am unwilling to doubt thy veracity, yet inconsistencies cannot both be true. JOHNSON Rasselas p. 27. [a. 1869.]

in'con-sis'tent, 1 in'kŏn-sis'tent; 2 ĭn'cŏn-sis'tĕnt, a. 1. Not consistent; intrinsically or logically discrepant or incompatible; that can not be true, put into practise, or made to exist at the same time with something else or with each other; disagreeing; discordant; contradictory; as, two inconsistent stories; inconsistent rules of life.

When there are two views which can not be taken of one single object at the same time, the terms expressing these views are said to be Opposite or Inconsistent.
WHATELY Logic bk. ii, p. 125. [a. 1836.]

2. Containing contradictory elements or parts; not agreeing with itself; self-contradictory; as, his story is inconsistent. 3. Specif., not uniform in action or opinion; characterized by contradictory acts or speeches or irreconcilable opinions or purposes, either all at once or in succession; changeable; fickle; as, an inconsistent person.

Ah! how unlust to Nature, and himself,
Is thoughtless, thankless, inconsistent man!
YOUNG Night Thoughts ii. l. 112.

in-dent'er, 1 in-dent'er; 2 in-dĕnt'er, n. 1. One who binds by indenture. 2. One who orders goods by indent. in-dent'or†.

in-den'tion, 1 in-den'shən; 2 in-dĕn'shŏn, n. 1. Same as DENT¹. 2. Print. The setting in of a line or body of type by a blank space at the beginning or left hand, as in the first line of a paragraph; also, the space thus left blank. 3. Indentation; as not (as it often is) to be used to be a shortened form of indentation, but an original word from dent (dint), "a denting in, a dépression," and hence is the proper word, rather than indentation, to express the idea.

The indention of an oak leaf is shorter than the indention of a long line. THOMAS MACKELLAR American Printer p. 132.

—hanging indention, equal indention of all lines of a paragraph except the first, which is longer than the others.

in-den'ture, 1 in-den'chur or -tūr; 2 in-dĕn'chur or -tūr, v. [<TURED; -TUR-ING.] I. t. To bind by indenture, as an apprentice.

Some cases, as of other laborers, indentured for their passage money. R. G. BOONE Education in the U. S. p. 64. [A. 1890.]

2†. To make dents or furrows in, as the brow; wrinkle. II. i. To run in and out.

in-den'ture, n. [Law. n.] An instrument of contract under seal; an instrument executed in duplicate between parties, each party keeping a counterpart. Formerly, in executing a deed in counterpart, it was written with both parts on one sheet, leaving a blank strip between them; the parts were indented by being cut asunder in a notched or waving line and the instrument was called an indenture.

Conditional services . . . under indentures or covenants, had from the first existed in Virginia. BANCROFT United States vol. i, p. 175. [L. N. A. C. 1867.]

2. A legal instrument for binding an apprentice or a servant to his master. 3. Same as INDENTATION², 2. 4. The act of indenting, or the state of being indented. [< OF. enderture, < LL. indentura, < indento: see INDENT, v.]—in-den'ture-ment.—in-den'ture-ship, n. [Rare.] The office of an indentured servant: bound apprenticeship.

in'dent-wise, 1 in'dent-waiz; 2 in'dĕnt-wīş, adv. After the manner of indenture, with interlocking dots.

in"de-pend'a-bl(e), a. Not to be relied upon.

in"de-pen'dence†, 1 in"di-pen'dens; 2 in"dĕ-pĕn'dĕnç, n. 1. Freedom from dependence upon others for guidance, government, or support; self-directing power; self-reliance. 2. Property or means sufficient to secure the comforts of life; a competency. 3. A spirit of self-reliance or of freedom from subordination to others.

You can go through the world with your shoes out and your nose in the air, and call it independence, if you like. That's not my way. L. M. ALCOTT Little Women p. 318. [L. 1868.]

4. Conveyancing. That which is over above out and your by a player who has no whister or partner.

SYN.: see LIBERTY.—Declaration of Independence, see DECLARATION.—I. day, the 4th of July: so called in the United States in commemoration of the declaration of independence.—I. Hall, an old Colonial structure on Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, in which the Declaration of Independence was adopted July 4, 1776: now a historical museum.

In"de-pen'dence, n. 1. A county in N. Arkansas; 779 sq. m.; corn province. Interred. 2. A city, county-seat of Jackson county, Mo. 3. A city, county-seat of Buchanan county, Ia. 4. A city, county-seat of Montgomery county, Kan.; incorporated by Feary, July 4, 1802.

In"de-pen'dence Bay. A bay in N. Auckland Greenland; discovered by Feary, July 4, 1802.

in"de-pen'den-cy, 1 in"di-pen'den-si; 2 in"dĕ-pĕn'dĕn-cy, n. 1. Independence. 2. Eccl. The principle that each congregation is a complete church subject to no superior authority but that of Jesus Christ; especially, the principles of the English Congregationalists or Independents, who lay less stress on the fellowship of churches than American Congregationalists. See CONGREGATIONALISM.

[Robert] Brown was an Independent. This word, and the words Independence and Independency, came into our language with him. E. E. HALE United States p. 43. [CHAUT. 1887.]

3. An autonomous or independent state. 4. Same as INDEPENDENCE, 2.

in"de-pen'dent, 1 in"di-pen'dent; 2 in"dĕ-pĕn'dĕnt, a. 1. Not subordinate or subject to another person or thing; having no relation of dependence for government, direction, or support; not relying upon others; having ability and freedom to manage one's own affairs; an independent body politic. 2. Affording means of independence; aiding freedom of action; as, an independent income. 3. Resulting from or indicating self-assurance and self-reliance; unconstrained; free; easy; bold. 4. Separate or disconnected; exclusive; regardless: with of; as, the soul may exist independent of matter.

The planets again are wholly independent of the will, and a man suffering from grief may command his features, but cannot always prevent the tears from coming into his eyes. DARWIN Emotions p. 75. [A. 1873.]

in'de-pen'dent, n. One who exercises his own will or judgment without the guidance or control of others, whether in thought or in some line of action; as, an independent in politics. Specif.: (1) Eccl. [L.] = (2). (2) who holds the principle of independency; an English Congregationalist.

The division between Independent and Presbyterian became every day more apparent; and the neuters found it at last requisite to seek shelter in one or the other party.

HUME England vol. v, p. 330. [r. s. & co. 1854.]

(3) [I- or i-] Polit. (a) One who is not an adherent of any political party. (b) [U. S.] Formerly, a member of a party that advocated the issue of paper currency not redeemable in coin; one of the Greenback party.

in'de-pen'dent-ism, n. The principle of ecclesiastical independency.

in-dep're-ca-bl(e), a. That can not be deprecated. [< L. indeprecabilis, < in- priv. + deprecor; see DEPRECATE.]

in"de-priv'a-bl(e), a. [Rare.] That can not be deprived or taken away.—in"de-priv"a-bil'i-ty, n.

in"de-scrib'a-bl(e), 1 in"di-skraib'a-bl; 2 in"dĕ-scrīb'a-bl, a. That can not be described; too great, too peculiar, or too affecting for description.—in"de-scrib'a-bly, adv.

in"de-scrib'a-bles, n. pl. [Humorous.] Trousers.

in"de-scrip'ta, n. [Rare.] Nothing described.

in"de-scrip'tive (-ēs), a. [Rare.] Not giving a good description.

in"de-sert', n. [Rare.] Absence of merit.

in-des'tig-nate, 1 in-des'ig-nēt; 2 in-dĕs'ĭg-năt, a. Without designation; specif., in logic, not having indication of quantity; indefinite: said of certain propositions.

Indefinite or indesignate propositions are those which are devoid of any mark of quantity whatever.

W. S. JEVONS Lessons in Logic p. 65. [MACM. 1878.]

in-des't-nent, 1 in-des't-nent; 2 in-dĕs'ĭ-nănt, a. [Rare.] Unpressing; perpetual.—in-des'ti-nent-ly, adv. Unceasingly.

in"de-struc'ti-bil'i-ty, 1 in"di-struk'ti-bil'i-ti; 2 in"dĕ-struc'tĭ-bĭl'ĭ-ty, n. The quality of being incapable of destruction by any natural agency: said primarily of material substances. in"de-struc'ti-bl(e), a.

The indestructibility of Force no more interferes with the theory of causation than the indestructibility of matter, meaning by matter the element of which all matter consists. MILL Logic pt. iii. [MACM. 1879.]

in"de-struc'ti-bl(e), 1 in"di-struk'ti-bl; 2 in"dĕ-struc'tĭ-bl, a. That can not be destroyed; not readily destroyed. SYN.: see IMMORTAL.—in"de-struc'ti-bly, adv.

in"de-ter'mi-na-bl(e), 1 in"di-tūr'mi-na-bl; 2 in"dĕ-tĕr'mi-na-bl, a. 1. That can not be determined, ascertained, or rendered definite. 2. Nat. Hist. That can not be classified or named: not definable: part of a specimen not sufficiently marked or not in good condition. 3. [Rare.] Not to be terminated or ended.—in"de-ter'mi-na-bl(e)ness, n. An indeterminable thing, point, or question.—in"de-ter'mi-na-bly, adv.—in"de-ter'mi-na-bly, adv.—in"de-ter'mi-na-cy, n.—in"de-ter'mi-na-tiv(e)s, a. [Rare.]

in"de-ter'mi-nate, 1 in"di-tūr'mi-nit; 2 in"dĕ-tĕr'mĭ-nat, a. 1. Not determinate; without settled boundaries or distinguishing marks; hence, not precise; indefinite; also, expressing indefiniteness.

Some is an indeterminate adjective.

W. S. JEVONS Principles of Science p. 41. [MACM. 1879.]

2. Math. (1) Having no defined value, tho a value may be subsequently assigned. (2) Having no fixed value. 3. Pertaining to the quality or state of being free to choose without the determination or constraint of influences or motives. 4. Bot. In estivation, possessing pericarp parts which are not imbricated in the buds. [< LL. indeterminatus, < in-, not; and see DETERMINATE.] SYN.: see EQUIVOCAL.—indeterminate analysis (Math.), that branch of analysis which treats of equations having an infinity of solutions because there are more unknown quantities than equations.—I. form, an algebraic expression that may have any one of an indefinite number of finite values, as the quotient of zero by zero ($\frac{0}{0}$).—in"de-ter'mi-nate-ly, adv.—in"de-ter'mi-nate-ness, n.

To think pure being we apply the predicate of indeterminateness. W. T. HARRIS Hegel's Logic p. 172. [S. C. & S. 1890.]

in"de-ter'mi-na-tion, n. 1. The state or quality of being unsettled or wavering, as of the mind; want of determination. 2. Lack of fixed or stated direction or tendency. 3. Indefiniteness; indefinite quantity.

in"de-ter'mined, } 1 in"di-tūr'mind; 2 in"dĕ-tĕr'mind, in"de-ter'minds, } n. Undetermined or indeterminate.

in"de-ter'min-ism, 1 in"di-tūr'mi-izm; 2 in"dĕ-tĕr'mĭn-ĭşm, n. Ethics. The doctrine that the choices and conduct of man, altho influenced by motives, are not determined by them as they were efficient causes; especially, the doctrine that, since motives have no existence external to the mind, the agent chooses the motives which shall influence him rather than is, strictly speaking, determined by them.—in"de-ter'min- ist, n. One who holds the doctrine of indeterminism.—in''de-ter''min-is'tic, a.

in''de-ō'ri-ent-āte†, a. Not deprived of virginity.

in''de-vout', in''de-vout'ly, etc. See IN-².

in-dew'†, rt. To induce; invest; put on.

in'dex, 1 in'dĕks; 2 in'dĕks, et. 1. To provide with or enter in an index; as, to index a library; to index a title. 2. [Rare.] To indicate; mark or manifest.

Character is indexed by customs. F. SAUNDERS Salad for the Solitary, The Toilette p. 320. [b. c. l., 1872.]

3. R. C. Ch. To put on the Index.

in'dex, n., [In'dĕks, 1; In'dĕks, 1 -dĕks-ez, -di-sīz; 2 -dĕks'ĕs, -di-sēs, pl.] A. Anything designed or used to indicate, point out, or guide, as the forefinger, the hand of a clock, the pointer on scales or on an astronomical or physical instrument, or the arm of a guide-post.

And the left hand's index dropping from the lips upon the cheek.

E. B. BROWNING Lady Geraldine's Courtship st. 30.

Specif.: (1) In anthropometry, a number expressing the relation to each other of two dimensions of an organ, aperture, or cavity, as the length and breadth of the skull. The normally greater dimension is usually taken as the standard and considered as equaling 100; to obtain the index the product of the normally smaller dimension × 100 is divided by the normally greater. See CRANIOMETRY. (2) Math. An exponent. (3) Crystal. One of a set of whole numbers, reciprocals of the parameters, used to express the relative intercepts of a crystal plane on the axes of reference. (4) Surv. A brass rule accompanying a plane-table and having at each end sight-vanes; an alidade. (5) Print. That which makes known an object by pointing or leading to it, denoting rather than describing or immediately showing what it is, as a demonstrative pronoun, or the hand ☞ in a geometrical figure. (6) Mus. A direct. (7) Print. A fist.

2. Anything that manifests or denotes; as, the face is the index of the soul.

An execution is more instinctive, more spontaneous, and therefore a truer index of a man's real mind, than a prayer which has been used for years.

LIDDON Bampton Lectures p. 369. [s. & w. 1869.]

3. An alphabetic list of matters discussed in a book or set of books, showing where each subject is to be found; a table of references to the pages of a book.

Some run their eyes rapidly over the Index, when there is one, which is no more than every book worth printing is entitled to. HOLMES Our Hundred Days in Europe ch. 3, p. 30. [J. R. & C., 1887.]

4. [I-] R. C. Ch. A record containing: (1) The Index Librorum Expurgandorum or I. Expurgatorius, a list of books from which certain passages must be eliminated before they may be read; (2) The I. Librorum Prohibitorum, a list of books which the church forbids its people to read, as being against faith or morals.

The lists constituting the Index are unofficially published from time to time in the annuals issued by the Congregation of the Index, a body composed of cardinals, theologians, and other ecclesiastics, acting under papal authority.

The catalogue of the Inquisition of Spain is the most excellent mean for the whole world; it has also the first that bore the title Index. The Catholic Encyc. vol. 3, p. 521. [R. A. CO. '08.]

5. [Local, Eng.] Same as BONNY, n., 3. 6. The quantity of a given explosive portion that is blended in a manufacturing plant at one time. 7. Forestry. The highest average actually found upon a given locality.

The term index, applied to stand, diameter-growth, height-growth, increment, and future yield, is the value found in a locality of normal, when normal is used to describe the assumed standard based upon actual measurements. GIFFORD PINCHOT Terms Used in Forestry, U. S. Dept. of Agr., Bulletin No. 61. [GOV. PTG. OFF. '05.] 8†. A prolog; prelude. [< L. index (indic-), < indicāre; see INDICATE.] SYN.: see LIST.

For all indexes having reference to craniometrical measurements, see table under CRANIOMETRY.

— absolute refractive index (Optics), in any medium, the value corresponding to the refractive index for the ray in a vacuum. — alveolar I., gnathic index. — antibrachial I., the ratio between the lengths of the humerus and the radius in a single arm. — auricular I., the ratio between the length and the breadth of the external ear. — card i. i. Library. An index each item of which is written on a separate card. 2. Com. A printed statistical list for issue of record and reference in various organized activities in connection with data subject to change or expansion. — clavicular-humeral I., used in anthropology in representing the length of the clavicle in relation to that of the humerus. — clavicular I.:— col'or-in''dex, n. The relative amount of hemoglobin contained in a red blood-corpuscle. — extraordinary I. of refraction, the refractive index of the extraordinary ray of a double-refracting crystal. — femorohumeral i. (Anthrop.), the ratio of the length of the bone of the upper arm to that of the thigh-bone. — humeroradial I., the distance between the superior spines of the ilium to the distance between the angle at the base of the acetabulum and the top: now in disuse.—in''dex-bar'', n. The movable arm of a sextant which carries the index-glass or mirror. — i. center, n. Mach. An adjustable attachment resembling a vise and fitted to a shaper or a milling-machine for the purpose of holding a piece of work between centers, and adjusted at any angle to the tool by means of an index-dial. — i. correction, n. The correction for index-error. — i. error, n. In mathematical instruments, the constant error to be added or reading due to the fact that the zero on the index is not in exact adjustment with that on the limb. 2. The correction which must be applied to the instrumental readings in order to correct the above error. — i. eyepiece, an eyepiece which has movable pointers in the plane of the diaphragm. — i.-finger, n. The forefinger: so designated because it is invariably used in pointing. — i.-fossil, n. Geol. A species of fossil indigenous to or characteristic of a certain geological zone. — i.-gage, n. Mech. A gage having a scale to show the distance apart of its adjusting points. — i.-glass, n. The mirror, moving with the index of a quadrant or sextant, reflecting to the horizon-glass. — i.-hand, n. A movable pointer or hand of a clock, watch, or other instrument. — i.-head, n. An attachment for a milling-machine or similar machine, to which a piece of material to be worked is attached, so as to be rotated at regular intervals through definite angles. — i.-learning, n. A smattering of knowledge gleaned from books of reference. — I. Librorum Expurgandorum, I. Librorum Prohibitorum, see INDEX, 4 — i.-machine, n. 1. Mech. A milling-machine provided with an attachment which enables it to cut objects requiring even spacing, such as gear-wheels. 2. Textile. A mechanism for fancy weaving, producing, by pins inserted in slats or by other methods, the same results as by Jacquard cards; a dobby. — i.-notation, n. Math. Representation of a number as a multiple of a power of 10, as 421.10^0 for 421, $.000,000,$ or 421.10^{-6} for 0.000421. — i.-number, n. Econ. A number intended to show the general average of prices at any given time: usually expressed in the form of a percentage. It is obtained by comparing the ratios of prices of staples at this given time with those of staples at a certain previous date, which have been established as a standard and whose index has been arbitrarily fixed at par (100). — I. of a circuit (Math.), the least number of its real intersections with a right line. — I. of a logarithm, the integral part. — I. of a subgroup (Math.), the fractional expression indicating the quotient of an order of any group by an order of a subgroup belonging to it. — i. of a surface or system of surfaces (Geom.), a number found by subtracting from the number of cross-cuts necessary to reduce the system to simply connected surfaces the number of the dimensions of space, and then adding two. — I. of platycnemy (Anat.), the ratio of the transverse and anteroposterior diameters of the tibia, showing the amount of lateral flattening (platycnemy) of the bone. — I. of refraction, the ratio of the sine of the angle of incidence to that of the angle of refraction when light enters a transparent substance. — I. of the natural scale (Math.), a symbol (a) associated with the natural scale of numbers, or with any similar manifold. — I. of the pelvic brim (Anthrop.), the ratio of the anteroposterior diameter of the pelvic brim, as taken from the promontory of the sacrum to the nearest points ventrally on the symphysis pubis, to the greatest breadth of the brim. — I. of variability (Biometry). The numerical expression of the variability from the mean standard occurring among the members of a given race or aggregation of individuals. — i.-plate, n. Mech. A perforated disk in a gear-cutting machine, lathe, milling-machine, or in a dividing-engine, adjustable, to aid in setting a gear-wheel or other piece into a given number of circumferential parts. — i. rerum, a note-book for entering memoranda, quotations, and the like, with a reference to the page where each of its entries. — i.-wheel, n. Mech. 1. A wheel having its edge graduated and notched at regular distances: used to control the amount of advance of the work in a screw-cutting lathe. 2. An index-plate. — infraspinous I. (Anthrop.), the ratio of the breadth of the scapula to its infraspinous length. — innominate I. (Anthrop.), the ratio of the height of the innominate bone to the height of the pelvis: now in disuse. — intermembral I. (Anthrop.), the ratio of the length of the humerus together with the radius to the length of the femur together with the tibia. — ischio-innominate I. (Anthrop.), the ratio of the length of the ischium to the height of the pelvis: now in disuse. — lumbar I., percental relation between the anterior and posterior lengths of the lumbar vertebræ. — refractive i. (Optics), the mean of the values of the extreme red and the extreme violet rays in the spectrum. — obturator I. (Anthrop.), the ratio of the transverse to the obturator foramen to its height. — opsonic I. (Hematol.), the ratio of the quantity of opsonins present in the blood of any individual to the quantity present in the blood of normally healthy person. In health it is high; in diseased conditions, low. See OPSONIN. — pelvic I. (Anat.), the ratio of the anteroposterior to the transverse diameter of the pelvic inlet. — phagocytic i., the opsonic index. — radio-humeral I. (Anthrop.), the ratio of the length of the radius to the length of the humerus. — refractive i. 1. Same as INDEX OF REFRACTION. 2. Elec. The degree to which a prism of any insulating substance bends the rays of light. It will cause an electric beam incident upon it to deviate from the direct path; a phenomenon analogous to the refraction of light. — relative refractive i., the ratio between the value of the passage of light into it from another medium. — sacral I. (Anat.), the ratio of the length of the sacrum to its breadth. — scapular I., the same as INFRASPINOUS INDEX. — subspinal I., same as INFRASPINOUS INDEX.

— in-dex'i-cal, a. 1. Pertaining to or having the form of an index. 2. Acting as an index; indicative. — in-dex'i-cal-ly, ad. — in''dex-less, a. Without an index.

in'dex-er, 1 in'dĕks-ər; 2 in'dĕks-er, n. One who or that which indexes.

in'dex-ter-ti-ty, n. Want of dexterity or expertness; clumsiness.

In'di-a, 1 in'dĭ-ə, 2 in'dĭ-a, n. 1. A part of the British empire in southeastern Asia, comprising the central member of the three southern Asiatic peninsulas, an equally large territory eastward, northward, and northwestward, and the western part of the eastern Asiatic peninsula. The name Hither India was formerly given to the middle or Hindustan peninsula, and Further India to the eastern extensions of the Bay of Bengal; the latter designation is still loosely applied to the whole eastern peninsula. The total area of India, including the native states and dependencies, is about 1,093,000 square miles, about 1,093,000 square miles being directly under British control; capital, Delhi. The administration of the British empire in India is entrusted in England to a secretary of state assisted by a council of fifteen to fourteen members, at least nine of whom must have lived or served in India for ten years, such service-period being not more than five years previous to their appointment. In India the governor-general is the supreme authority, assisted by a council of five ordinary members and one extraordinary member for the commander-in-chief, which is expanded into a legislative body by the addition of other members nominated by the Viceroy or elected in accordance with the Act of 1909. In 1912 it consisted of nine members. India, broadly speaking, rather a continent than a country, comprising the most diverse variety of physical features, climates, races, religions, and languages. See INDIAN EMPIRE and PUNJAB. 2. An abbreviation for India paper, India silk, etc. — East India Act, an English statute of 1767 (7 Geo. III, ch. 49), to regulate the judicial system of India. — East I. Company, one of several companies organized and chartered by European nations, as the English, French, Dutch, and Danish, for trade with India; specif., the company chartered by Queen Elizabeth (1600) given territorial power from 1765 to 1858, when this function was transferred to the crown by the Act for the better Government of India, and continued as a medium for distributing stock until 1873, when it was finally dissolved. — I. or Indian blue, same as INDIGO. — I. china. 1. A Chinese porcelain with blue decoration, made for India and America through the agency of the East India Company during the 18th century. 2. A modern Chinese ware of the same coloring. — I. cotton, a heavy figured cotton for upholstery. — I.-cut, a. Lapidary. Cut in Indian style; a method of cutting a diamond so as to retain as much of the stone as possible. Stones cut in this way usually assume the brilliant form, but are somewhat clumsy in appearance, being generally recut for sale in Europe or America. — I. docks, extensive docks and warehouses in London for the East Indian and West India shippers. — I. gum, see GUM ARABIC, in table under GUM. — I. ink, or Chinese ink. 1. A black pigment composed of a mixture of lampblack or burnt cork with gelatin and water, scented with Borneo camphor and musk, made in India, China, and Japan: sold in sticks. 2. A similar ink made of sepia. — I. matting, a kind of matting made of a fragrant grass. — I. Office, the administrative office of state in England dealing with British Indian affairs, and consisting of a secretary and council. It was established under the Act of 1858, on the transfer of India to the crown. — I. paper. 1. A thin yellowish absorbent printing-paper, made in China and Japan from vegetable fiber, and used in taking the finest proofs from engraved plates. 2. A very thin, tough, and opaque printing-paper, made in imitation of paper from the Orient, and used principally for Bibles and prayer-books. — I. proof, an artist's proof taken on India paper from an engraved plate. — I. scrim, same as SCRIM. — I. shawl, a cashmere shawl.

in-dī-a-dem, rt. [Rare.] To set in a diadem.

In'di-a-man, 1 in'dĭ-ə-man, 2 in'dĭ-a-man, n. [-MEN, pl.] A ship in the India trade; specif., a large armed merchant ship in the service of the East India Company.

In'di-an, 1 in'dĭ-ən; 2 in'dĭ-an, a. 1. Of or pertaining to India or the Indies; as, an Indian temple; the Indian tongues; also, made in India. 2. Of or pertaining (1) to the American native races generally; as, Indian reservations; an Indian war-whoop; or (2) specifically to the West Indies.

It has been estimated that the total Indian population within the territory of the United States east of the Rocky Mountains, did not at any time subsequent to the discovery of America exceed, if indeed it even reached 300,000 individuals.

J. R. SEELEY Expansion of England course i, p. 45. [MACM., 1883.]

3. [U. S.] Made from maize or Indian corn; as, Indian meal. [< L. Indianus, < India, < Gr. Indos, < Gr. India, < Indos, Indus river; < Sans. sindhu, river.]

— Indian architecture. For the various styles see BUDDHIST, CHINESE, DRAVIDIAN, JAIN, MOGUL, MORAMMEDAN; SANSKRIT. — I. balm, the palm ATTALEA (Attalea crectum). — I. berry, the berry-like fruit of Anamirta cocculus; cocculus indicus. — I. blue, see table under BLUE. — I. bread. 1. Cassava. 2. Same as TUCKAHOE, the southern United States. — I. breadroot, an erect tuberous herb (Psoralea esculenta) with a large farinaceous root. — I. bull, the zebu. — I. cedar, the RED CEDAR, as the Indian expects as equivalent for a gift. — I. gum-nut, the clearing-nut. — I. harvest, the harvest of Indian corn. — I. hen, any one of the wild turkeys. — I. lettuce. 1. The American calumba (Frasera carolinensis). 2. The round-leaved wintergreen (Pyrola rotundifolia). See illus. under PYROLA. — I. leaf, same as INDIAN BREADROOT. — I. linsang, chittagong wood. — I. mallow, a tall weed (Abutilon abutilon), with large, very velvety leaves and small yellow flowers; velvet-leaf. — I. meal, properly, the flour of parched corn, same as MEAL-MOTH. See under MEAL¹, n. — I. millet, the tall grass Sorghum vulgare, of which the Chinese sugar-cane, broom-corn, and durra are varieties. — I. mocoasin, the succoured flower. — I. mutiny, a fanatical rising in India in 1857–1858, occasioned by the superstition of the natives. Delhi, Cawnpur, and Lucknow were the chief centers. Lucknow was relieved by Sir Colin Campbell in 1857, and by Campbell in November. — I. mythology, see MYTHOLOGY. — I. painiroot, the redroot. — I. physic, n. Either of two species of Gillenia, common in the woods of the eastern U. States. — I. pink, the cypress-vine (Ipomœa quamoclit): a West-Indian name. — I. pipe, n. A low, smooth, waxy-white, one-flowered herb (Monotropa uniflora) common in moist woods. — I. pipestone, same as CATLINITE. — I. pitcher, same as PITCHER, n., 2. — I. plantain, any one of several species of a genus of smooth tall herbs of the family Mesembrianthemaceæ, the American white hellebore (Veratrum viride). — I. pony, a cayuse. — I. puccoon, same as PUCCOON, n., 1. — I. purge, the manroot. — I. red, Indian ocher. See OCHER, 1, and see REDWOOD, 2. — I. region, see ORIENTAL REGION. — I. ring-worm, Tokelau itch (Tinea circinata). — I. runner duck, a breed of small colored domestic ducks, originally brought from India. — I. sage, the thoroughwort. — I. sago, a commercial imitation of sago, made from the pith of the sagopalm, see SAGO, n. — I. shoe, n. The moccasin + flower. — I. shot, n. Same as INDIAN CANNA (Canna indica) from the West Indies, with large, smooth, erect, glossy leaves, flowers most commonly red and yellow, and hard, black, shot-like seeds, which give it its name. — I. spap, same as SOAPBERRY, 2. — I. sugar region (Zoögeog.), the region which comprises the middle member of the three southeastern peninsulas of Asia, a tract extending eastward as far as the Malay Peninsula, and a territory eastward as far as the Himalayas. — I. summer, see under SUMMER. — I. tapir, the Malayan tapir (Tapirus malayanus). See TAPIR. — I. thistle, the wild teasel (Dipsacus sylvestris). — I. tobacco, an erect, hairy, branched herb (Lobelia inflata) dix, with flowers; c, the fruit; d, the seed. — I. turnip, a common American herb (Arisæma triphyllum), with one obtusely toothed leaves, small pale-blue flowers, and inflated, oval, many-seeded capsules: a famous quack medicine — emetic, expectorant, sudorific, and poisonous. — I. turmeric, see TURMERIC, 2. — I. turnip. A common American herb (Arisæma triphyllum), with one of the arum family, growing from a farinaceous, turnip-shaped corm, or solid bulb, with an insensely acrid juice, bearing two compound trifoliolate leaves and a curious spike of flowers in a spathe known as jack-in-the-pulpit. 2. The prairie-turnip (Psoralea esculenta).—i. vampire, same as VAMPIRE-BAT. See under VAMPIRE, n.—i. warrior, n. A Pacific-coast lousewort (Pedicularis densiflora) with reddish spicate inflorescence.—i. wheat, same as INDIAN CORN.—i. wild dog, the dhole.—i. wolf, an Asiatic wolf (Canis pallipes).—i. yellow, see EUXANTHIN.

In'di-an, I in'di-an; 2 in'di-an (XIND), n. 1. A member of any of the native races of India, or of Farther India; loosely, a Hindu. The total population of the Indian empire is approximately 315,000,000, consisting of the Aryans in northern India and Deккan; the Dravidian races of southern India; the Kolarian aborigines of the Central Provinces; the Tibeto-Burmese; Parsees, Europeans, and Jews. The primitive races of Farther India are generally believed to be of Malay origin and represent almost every degree of civilization; the principal peoples at the present day being the Burmese, Siamese, Anamese, Cambodians, and Tonkinese. 2. A native or naturalized inhabitant of the West Indies. 3. A member of one of the aboriginal races of North, South, and Central America: thus misnamed by Columbus and his contemporaries because they were supposed to be natives of Farther India. There is much diversity of opinion concerning the origin of the American Indians, but they are generally believed to be an offshoot of the Asiatic races. They have straight or slightly wavy glossy black hair, prominent cheek-bones, a usually dark skin, and aquiline noses. See TABLE OF AMERICAN STOCKS, under AMERICAN.

Cruel murders were committed without provocation, and for no other purpose than the gratification of the homicidal hatred of the Indian that has often existed on the frontier.
H. H. SIMMONS, Hist. United States, bk. i, p. 15. [n. d., w. 1888.]

4. The languages of the American Indians; or the language of any particular tribe.

These languages differ widely with locality, but are nearly always highly polysynthetic, several have been reduced to written form, and nearly all appear frequently, often in a corrupt form, in both North- and South-American geographical names.

The multiplicity of languages among the American Indians was one of the first things that struck the earliest investigators . . . Thomas Jefferson, who besides his other statesman was also a considerable naturalist . . . observed that for one 'radical language' in Asia there would be found probably twenty in America.
Encyc. Brit., xvi. 514.

5. A European who has resided in India; an Anglo-Indian. 6. Formerly, in Australasia, any one of the aborigines; a native. 7. [U. S.] Indian meal; corn-meal. 8. The constellation Indus situated between Sagittarius and the south pole.

— blanket Indian (W. U. S.), a reservation Indian who is dependent upon the government for blankets and supplies.—paper I., the Indian. See under AMERICAN.—I. office (often popularly called bureau; see BUREAU), the office in the Department of the Interior of the United States which is especially charged with matters pertaining to the Indian tribes and their reservations, agencies, training and industrial schools, etc.—In'di-an's-dream'n, n. The wild potato (Apios tuberosa).—I. pinnate'root, n. Same as OSWEGO TEA, under TEA.—red I., a member of one of the copper-colored races of America: an American Indian; a redskin; red man.

In'di-an'a, I in'di-an'ə; 2 in'di-an'ä, n. 1. A north central State of the United States; 36,045 sq. m.; scene of disastrous inundations, March, 1913; capital, Indianapolis. 2. A county in W. Pennsylvania; 829 sq. m. 3. Its counties.

In'di-an-ap'o-lis, I in'di-an-ap'o-lis; 2 in'di-an-ăp'o-lis, n. A manufacturing, commercial city; capital of Indiana and county-seat of Marion County, seat of Butler University (non-sectarian), founded in 1850.

In'di-an'ch'chi-pet'a-go. Malay Archipelago.

In'di-an-ize'', I -ız'; 2 -īz', v. t. [-IZED; -IZING.] To make like an Indian in habits or appearance.

In'di-an o'cean. One of the five great oceans; bounded by Africa, Australia, and Asia; the south parallel of south latitude; estimated area, 17,320,500 sq. m.

In'di-an-o'la, I in'di-an-ō'la; 2 in'di-an-ō'la, n. A city, county-seat of Warren county, Iowa; seat of Simpson College (Methodist Episcopal), founded in 1860.

In'di-an-o'l'o-gist, I in'di-an-o'l'o-jıst; 2 in'di-an-ŏ'l'o-jıst, n. A student of the aboriginal American races. [< INDIAN + -OLOGIST.]

In'di-an Pass. 1. A pass in Nevada; elevation, 9,057 ft. 2. A defile in the Adirondacks, New York; elevation, 2,937 ft. 3. A pass in the Catskill Mountains, New York; 2,894 ft.

In'di-an riv'er. A navigable tidal inlet of the Atlantic ocean, in eastern Florida; length, 100 m.

In'di-an Ter'ri-to'ry, pop., a Territory of the United States; now a part of the State of Oklahoma.

In'di-an-weed'', I in'di-an-wēd'; 2 in'di-an-wēd', n. A herb of the valerian species, used in Virginia as a cure for wounds.

In'di-a-rub'ber, I in'di-a-rub'ər; 2 in'di-ə-rŭb'ər, n. 1. A soft, flexible, and very elastic substance derived from the milky sap of various tropical plants: now commonly abbreviated to rubber. See RUBBER.

He was described as a man wearing an India-rubber coat on India-rubber shoes and a India-rubber cap, and in his pocket an India-rubber purse and a India-rubber ball.
Cyc. of Am. Biog., Charles Goodyear in vol. ii, p. 684. [a. 1888.]

2. [Colloq., U. S.] An overshoe made of india-rubber; an obsolescent term. See GUM1, n., 4. 3. [Colloq., Eng.] An eraser.

— India-rubber tree, any tree yielding caoutchouc (see above), especially the Ficus elastica, often grown for ornament.—I. vine, a twining shrub (Cryptostegia grandiflora) of the milkweed family, yielding a very pure caoutchouc.

In'di-ıc, I in'dik; 2 in'dik, a. Characterizing a hypothetical acid occurring in the form of potassium salt, $C_8H_{11}N_2O_8K$, and made by treating indin, an isomer of indigo, with alcoholic caustic potash. [< INDIN.]

In'di-ic, a. Of or pertaining to India, its races, languages, and culture; Indian. [< L. Indicus, < Gr. Indikos, < India; see INDIAN.] — Indic languages, the languages spoken or originating in India, belonging to the southern or Asiatic division of the Indo-European languages, and including the living languages, the Hindu and the Gipsy dialects, and the dead languages, Sanskrit, Prakrit, and Pali. See GIPSY; HINDU.

Indic., abbr. Indicative.

in'di-can, I in'di-kan; 2 in'di-kan, n. Chem. 1. A light-brown syrupy compound, $C_{14}H_{17}NO_{11}$, contained in several species of Indigofera, Isatis tinctoria, and other plants. By its decomposition the blue coloring-matter indigo is formed. 2. Potassium indoxyl sulfate ($C_8H_6NSO_4K$) contained in the blood and urine of certain animals, including man. [< L. indicum; see INDIGO.]—urinary indican (Pathol.), a product of putrefaction in the intestinal canal. Normally but little appears in the urine, but in wasting diseases, constipation, etc., it may increase and be sufficient to impart a bluish tinge to the urine. In'di-ca-nu'ri-a, in'di-ca-nu'ric, n. The product, $C_8H_5NO_4$, of the treatment of indican with a solution of barium hydroxid.

In'di-cant, I in'di-kant; 2 in'di-cant. I. a. Indicating or pointing out. II. n. That which indicates or points out; in medicine, a symptom or set of symptoms that indicates or suggests a certain treatment. [< *L. indican-(t-)*e, ppr. of indico, point out, < in, in, + dico, say.]

In'di-cate, I in'di-kēt; 2 in'di-cāt, v. [-CAT'ED; -CAT'ING.] 1. To give a suggestion of, as something that may occur in the future; give reason to expect; as, the clouds indicate rain. 2. To give a knowledge of; point out; show, as something existing or taking place; as, fermentation indicates heat; tears indicate grief.

If plainness of dress indicates power of sense, as it usually does, then Hyperion's head is unmistakably of musical quality.—ANONYMOUS Wake Robin, Return of Birds p. 16. [n. s. & co. 1886.]

3. To point out very briefly. Specif.: (1) Med. Art. To represent or suggest by outline, contour, or tones; leave in outline, to be filled in afterward. (2) Mechanical and other Conventional Art. To suggest or represent; as, a tree indicates a forest, a ship indicates a fleet, etc. 4. Steam-engin. To test, as a steam-engine, with an indicator. See INDICATOR, 2.

5. Med. To show or suggest by symptoms (the disease or its remedy); as, weakness indicates anemia, etc. [< L. indicatus, pp. of indico; see INDICANT.] Syn.: see ALLUDE.—Indicating bill, one on which the bill displays a number when it rings, as in an elevator indicator.

In'di-ca-tion, I in'di-kē'shən; 2 in'di-cā'shon, n. 1. The act of indicating; in any sense; manifestation; prediction; pointing out. 2. That which indicates. Specif.: (1) Med. That which indicates or suggests; a token; sign; symptom; as, the east wind is an indication of an approaching storm. 3. Med. The manifestation afforded by the symptoms of disease as to the course of bodily changes. 4. Steam-engin. A test, as of a steam-engine, made with an indicator. [< L. indicatio(n-), < indico; see INDICANT.]

Syn.: see AUGURY; CHARACTERISTIC; MARK.—letter of indication, a letter of credit received by the banker, containing the holder's signature for identification and indicating the method of drawing the funds.

In-dic'a-tive, I in-dik'a-tiv; 2 in-dĭc'a-tĭv, a. 1. Of in-dic'a-tive, } such nature as to indicate; giving intimation or knowledge of something; as, politeness is indicative of good breeding.

Socrates had a strong burly figure, prominent and crab-like eyes, a flat nose with broad open nostrils, a large and thick-lipped mouth, and a forehead of great but partial power.
ALEX. GRANT Xenophon p. 89. [w. p. 1871.]

2. Medieval and other Conventional Art. Representing a whole by a part, as a forest by a tree, a fleet by a ship, etc. [< L. indicativus, < L. indicatus; see INDICATE.]

— indicative mode or mood, that mode which asserts or questions directly; as, John reads; does John read?

In-dic'a-tive-ly, adv. So as to show or signify.

in'di-ca''tor, I in'di-kā'tər or -tor; 2 in'di-cā'tor, n. 1. One who or that which indicates or points out.

Clothes, dress, changed with the times. . . . They were the outward evidence of the inward and spiritual nature.
FROUDE Thomas Carlyle vol. ii, p. 105. [n. 1882.]

Specif.: Any contrivance or apparatus, automatic or otherwise, which makes a mark, record, or sign to indicate the condition or position of something; as, (1) a watergage; (2) a device to indicate the speed of an engine; (3) dials showing the position of elevators, cages in a mine-shaft, etc.; (4) devices for recording the arrival and departure of trains, the time of arrival collected in street-cars, or for testing the running of spindles for any eccentricity, etc.

In a motion mill, an indicator is simply a piece of clockwork with a dial face so connected with the front roller of a slubbing or roving frame as to indicate on the dial the number of hanks, of 840 yards, that the machine has produced.
HENLEY'S Encyclopedia of Practical Engineering and Allied Trades vol. iii.

Steam-engine Indicator.

a, cord for giving motion to the drum

2. Mach. An instrument attached to (d); l, lever for a steam-engine, by the action of swinging the pencil (p) away from or into contact with the steam itself, actually draws an indicator-diagram from which may be ascertained, (1) the gross power; (2) drum; ip, indicator-piston; s, spring; v, distribution-valves; w, waste-valves; (3) the ratio of the pressure in by the spring the cylinder to the boiler pressure; (4) a, and rising or the tightness of the valves and the falling in the steam piston; (5) the effects of cylinder condensation; (6) the effects of steam vaporization; (7) wiredrawing in the passages; (8) rise in the cylinder and compression, cut-off, release, and cushioning, etc.; and (8) certain facts concerning the transformation of work into work and the influence of the cylinder in that respect. In the ordinary type of indicator the cylinder of the engine is connected by a tube with a small cylinder, into which a piston fits and is pressed down to the bottom by a spiral spring so constructed that when steam is admitted through the tube the piston is forced upward against it with a strength proportionate to the steam-pressure. The top of the piston-rod communicates with a pencil which comes in contact with a diagram-paper rotating in sympathy with the movement of the piston. On this diagram-paper the pencil records the fluctuations of pressure occurring in the engine cylinder.

3. Chem. A substance, as litmus, potassium permanganate, etc., which colors a solution and by its disappearance, reappearance, or change of color, when a reagent is added, indicates acidity, alkalinity, etc. 4. Anat. A muscle, used to extend the forefinger; the extensor indicis. 5. Ornith. (1) [L.] A genus typical of Indicatoridæ. (2) A bird of this genus. 6. [Australian.] One of a group of small seams containing pyrites, in the intersections of which with the gold-bearing quartz veins of the locality are often found valuable deposits of gold. [L., < L. indico; see INDICANT.]

Indicators are generally named from their use or mechanism; as, battle-order indicator, the instrument which signals to the gunners on board a battleship the instructions telegraphed by the commander; circuit-i., a device, usually a vertical galvanometer, to show the presence and direction of an electric current and sometimes approximately its strength; heeling-i., any contrivance, as a clinometer, which shows the extent to which a vessel rolls; integrating i., an instrument which registers and records the amount of power produced by an engine in a given number of revolutions; jig-i., a device for drawing curves showing a jig action in dressing ore, like the indicator of a steam-engine; leak-i., an apparatus or instrument which shows the rise or fall of water in the hold of a ship; leeway-i., an apparatus to show the amount of drift which a vessel makes when close-hauled; library i., same as CARD-INDEX; motion-i., an apparatus for indicating continuously the rotation-speed of a machine; a speed-gage (speed-i.); nautical i., an instrument devised to show the latitude, longitude and variation of a compass at sea; printer's-i., an instrument which records for the photographic printer the number of prints to be made, as well as those already made; road i., an automatic device which informs the driver of an automobile of his location and warns him of dangerous roads, curves, etc. It consists of a small metal box which may be loaded with a film for any particular road and then placed on the dashboard of the automobile and connected with one of the front wheels by a flexible shaft; shoal-i., a buoy or other device by which to indicate the presence of shoal water; stock-i., an instrument by which stock-quotations are received and printed by electricity; a stock-printer; track-i., an instrument carried by a railway-car for registering the level, alignment, smoothness, etc., of the track on which the car runs.

— In'di-ca''tor-card'', n. 1. Originally, the paper on which an indicator-diagram was traced. 2. Same as INDICATOR-DIAGRAM.—I.-cock, n. A valve or cock which controls the supply of steam to an engine indicator.—I.-diagram, n. A diagram or tracing drawn by an indicator, especially, one drawn by a steam-engine indicator, and showing the pressure in the cylinder at every point of the stroke, etc.—I.-drum, n. The cylinder which holds the indicator-card.—I.-muscle, n. Anat. Same as INDICATOR, 4.—I.-ocular, n. An ocular for the microscope in which a fine indicator of the nature of a filum is fastened to the ocular diaphragm so as to extend across the microscopic field which is on a level with the real image, thus enabling the use of the indicator to demonstrate anything in the image which an instructor wishes to emphasize.—I.-piston, n. Same as INDICATOR-PISTON.—I.-point, n. In thermodynamics, a point on an indicator-diagram corresponding to the instantaneous state of a system.—I.-plotter, n. The pointer of a telegraph indicator.—I.-post, n. A stand in a public office, mercantile store, factories, and the like where the service-valve is located, an indicator showing its position.—I. telegraph, a telegraph whose signals are made by the movement of an electric needle over a dial; a needle-telegraph.—I.-valve, n. A form of valve the condition of which (whether open or shut) is indicated externally.

In'di-ca-tor'i-de, I in'di-ka-tor'i-dē; 2 in'di-ca-tŏr'i-dē, n. pl. Ornith. A paleotropical family of scansorial birds with a tufted cil-gland, 12 tail-feathers, and mandibular process of the sternum bifurcate; honey-guides or honey-eaters. [< INDICATOR.] — in'di-ca-to'rid, n. — in'di-ca-to'roid, a.

in'di-ca-to-ry, I in'di-ka-to-ri; 2 in'di-ca-to-ry (XIII), a. Serving to show or make known; indicative.

in'di-ca'trix, I in'di-kē'triks; 2 in'di-cā'triks, n. 1. Geom. The curve of the second degree formed by the intersection of a surface with a plane infinitely distant from the center and the tangent plane at any point. 2. Optics & Crystal. In doubly refracting minerals, an imaginary ellipsoidal surface, the elements of which are proportional to the reciprocals of the extraordinary ray in the principal directions, and likewise to the indices of refraction of the extraordinary ray in those directions. It is the shape at any given instant of the wavefront of the extraordinary ray. [< L. indicatus, pp. of indicator; see INDICATOR.] — indicatrix of a curve (Geom.), the curve indicated on a unit sphere by the extremity of a diameter drawn at right angles to an axis of a curve and parallel to the tangent plane at any point.

In'di-cav'it, I in'di-kav'it, n. [L., 3d per. sing. act. ind. perf. of indico; see INDICANT.] A writ of prohibition which lay for the patron of a church whose clerk was sued in the Ecclesiastical Court by another clerk for the recovery of tithes amounting to a fourth part of the value of the living. The effect of the writ was to remove the suit from the Ecclesiastical to the King's Court.

In'di-ces, I in'di-sēz; 2 in'di-cēs, n. Plural of INDEX: used especially in science and mathematics.

In'di-ci-a, I in-dish'i-ə; 2 in-dĭsh'i-a, n. pl. Discriminating marks; indications; badges; tokens; symptoms.

An agent may clothe his act with all the indicia of authority, and yet the act itself may not be within the scope of his actual authority. PARSONS Contracts vol. i, pt. i, bk. i, p. 45. [L., pl. of indicium, < index (indic-); see INDEX.]

In'di-cial, I in-dish'əl; 2 in-dĭsh'al, a. Anat. & Ornith. Relating or belonging to the index-finger; the principal digit of a fore limb. 2. Having the form of an index. 3. Of such a nature as to indicate.

in'di-cite, I in-dik'ıt; 2 in-dĭc'ıt, n. Mineral. A blue or bluish-black variety of tourmalin. [< Gr. indikon (see INDIGO) + -LITE.]

In'di-co-plei'a-des, I in'di-ko-pli'ə-dēz; 2 in'di-co-plī'a-dēz, n. A name given to Cosmos, a Greek traveler and geographer of the 6th century. [< Gr. Indikon, Indian, + pleiades, sailor.]

in-dict', I in-dıt'; 2 in-dīt', vt. 1. Law. To find and declare chargeable with crime in the manner prescribed by law; prefer an indictment against; said of the action of grand juries. 2†. To appoint in a public manner; publish; proclaim; convoke; summon, as a public meeting, a council, etc. [< OF. indicter, < L. indicto, freq. of indico; see INDICANT.]

Syns.: see ARRAIGN.— in-dict'a-bl(e), a. Subject to indictment.

Men may spend a long life without an indictable action and without an honest one.
H. W. BENCHER Lect. to Young Men lect. ii, p. 55. [d. n. 1855.]

— in-dict'a-bly, adv. — in-dict-ee', n. One who is indicted.—in-dict'er, n. One who indicts. in-dict'or†, in-dic'tion, 1 in-dik'shən: 2 in-dic'shon, n. 1. A cycle or period of fifteen years, introduced by Constantine as a fiscal term, and adopted by the popes as part of their chronological system. At the beginning of an ancient indiction all real estate was valued and the valuation proclaimed, the tax thereupon being paid annually for the ensuing fifteen years. 2. The number of one of these cycles, or that of any particular year in its cycle. The Greek indiction begins on Sept. 1; the Roman or Pontifical begins on Jan. 1, Dec. 25, or March 25; the Constantinian, imperial, or Cæsarian begins on Sept. 24. To find the indiction, 3 is added to the number of the year in the Christian era and the result is divided by 15; the quotient will be the number of the indiction or cycle, and the remainder the position of the year in that indiction. Thus, 1912 was the tenth year of the 127th indiction. Formerly the indictions were reckoned from A. D. 312. 3†. A proclamation, as of a fast; a declaration. [< L. indictio (n-), < indico; see INDICANT.] —in-dic'tion-al, a. Relating to or concerning an indiction.

in-dic'tive(ē), 1 in-dik'tiv; 2 in-dic'tiv, a. Accusing; tending to indict; containing a charge or indictment.

in-dict'ment, 1 in-dīt'ment or -mənt; 2 in-dīt'ment, n. Law. 1. The act of indicting, or the state of being indicted; formal charge or accusation in general. 2. A formal written charge of crime, preferred at the suit of the government and presented by a grand jury on oath to the court in which it is impaneled, as the basis for trial of the accused; the legal document itself.

Here is the indictment of the good Lord Hastinge, Which in a set hand fraimed.

SHAKESPEARE King Richard III. act iii, sc. 6.

A presentment and indictment differ; 2 Inst. 739; Comb. 223. A presentment is properly the finding of the grand inquest of matter present to the court from their own knowledge or observation; Every indictment which is found by the grand jurors is presented by them to the court and therefore every indictment is presentment but not every presentment is an indictment; 9 Gray 231; Story, Const. § 1784. Brown Law Dictionary vol. 1, p. 1013.

3. Scots Law. The form of process under which a criminal is put to trial at the instance of the Lord Advocate.

—joint indictment, that form of indictment in which several persons are charged with the same crime. —in-dict'ment-ee', n. One indicted.

in'dies, 1 in'diz; 2 in'diz, n. pl. 1. The East Indies. 2. Allegorically used to designate a country or place where great wealth exists.

Our King has all the Indies in his armes

in-dif'fer-ence, 1 in-dif'er-ənç, 2 in-dif'er-ɛnç, n. 1. The quality or state of being unconcerned, indifferent, apathetic, or insensible; the manifestation of the same. (1) Lack of interest or feeling regarding what is presented to the mind; apathy, as, she regarded him with indifference. God did not make this world in jest; no, nor in indifference. THOREAU Early Spring in Mass., Mar. 31, 1838 p. 284. [H. M. & CO.] (2) Neutrality of mind between different persons or things; absence of inclination for one rather than prejudice or bias; as, an honest judge decides with indifference. An attitude of indifference, or neutrality, in the presence of vice, is as truly immoral as an apologetic attitude.

2. The quality of not arousing interest or approval. (1) A low degree of excellence; as, indifference of workmanship; comparative mediocrity. (2) Want of preponderating reasons for discrimination, selection, or use; immateriality; as, the indifference of trivial matters. (3) Lack of difference or distinction between things; resemblance; similarity; as, the indifference of doublings. 3. (1) The fact of being unimportant or of no essential consequence; insignificance, as in the phrase, "his course is a matter of indifference." (2) An essentially unimportant matter or thing. [< indifferens, -ntis, < in-, not, + differentia, < indifferen(t-)s; see INDIFFERENT.] in-dif'ference'point. SYN.: see APATHY; NEGLECT.—in-dif'fer-ence point' n. Psychol. A point in a series of successive test judgments of reproduced time-intervals, the greatest accuracy is regularly attained. Errors of judgment increase on either side of this point. The theoretical point at which neither of two contrasted sensations or other qualities is experienced, when the stimulus is applied. The point of transition on a scale of positive and negative values.

in-dif'fer-ent, 1 in-dif'er-ənt, 2 in-dif'er-ɛnt, a. 1. Having no inclination, choice, or interest; apathetic; insensible; as, to be indifferent to one's interests.

The indifferent citizen does the state a double wrong when he neglects to vote.

H. S. POMEROY Ethics of Marriage p. 36. [P. & W. 1888.]

2. Only passably or tolerably good, without any marked excellence; ordinary; poor; as, it is indifferent bad, or indifferent? 3. Awakening no concern or consideration; unimportant; as, to the ascetic pleasures are indifferent. 4. Not inclined to one thing or party more than to another; neutral; unprejudiced; impartial; indifferent juror. 5. Biol. Undifferentiated; not specialized: said of types and of organs. 6. Not active; neutral: said of chemical compounds, parts of magnets, etc. 7†. [Prov. Eng. or Obs.] Sick; in bad health. 8. Indistinguishable; undistinguished: said of, also, equivalent; possessing no distinction. [OF., < L. indifferen(t-)s, < in-, not; and see DIFFERENT.] SYN.: see ABSTRACTED; APATHETIC.—indifferent point (Phys. Chem.), the point on the curve showing the relationship of temperature to solubility of any given salt, corresponding to an indifferent equilibrium.—I. tissue, tissue in its primitive form before it has become specialized; embryonic tissue.—morally I. (Ethics), having no distinctive moral character; neither right nor wrong. See ADIAPHORA, n.

in-dif'fer-ent, n. 1. An apathetic or unconcerned person. 2. An object of indifference. 3. pl. [Rare.] Adiaphora; things of slight importance.

in-dif'fer-ent-ʟe, 1 in-dif'er-ənt-li; 2 in-dif'-fer-ɛnt-li, adv. [It.] Mus. Coldly; unimpassionedly; with indifference. in-dif'fer-ent'ness, n.

in-dif'fer-en-tial, 1 in-dif'-er-ən'shəl; 2 in-dif'er-ɛn'shal. [Rare.] I. a. Showing indifference. II. n. Anything that is of no importance.

In-dif'fer-en'tia-al'ʟy, a. Not differentiated.

in-dif'fer-ent-ism, 1 in-dif'-er-ənt-izm; 2 in-dif'er-ɛnt-izm, n. 1. Theol. The doctrine that the differences in religious faith are of no importance; adiaphorism.

It is a melancholy fact that, in China, Buddhism has led the entire population not only into indifferentism but into absolute godlessness. DRAPER Intell. Devel. Europe vol. 1, p. 74. [H.]

2. Philos. The doctrine that to be in thought and in reality are one and the same thing; the doctrine of absolute identity; identism. 3. Habitual or systematic indifference.

in-dif'fer-ent-ist, 1 in-dif'-er-ənt-ist; 2 in-dif'er-ɛnt-ist, n. A person who is indifferent or neutral concerning any subject; specif., a supporter of indifferentism.

The great majority of people are neither believers nor disbelievers; but indifferentists — slowly settling toward an agnostic non-committalism that is destructive of all intellectual and moral earnestness.

G. M. GOULD in The Monist [Chicago] Apr., 1891, p. 372.

in-dif'fer-ent-ly, 1 in-dif'-er-ənt-li; 2 in-dif'er-ɛnt'ly, adv. 1. Without preference. 2. Neither well nor ill; passably.

in'di-ful'vin, 1 in'di-ful'vin; 2 in'di-fūl'vin, n. A brittle, reddish-yellow resin obtained by heating indican with dilute acids. [< INDICAN + L. fulvus, tawny.]

in'di-fus'cin, 1 in'di-fus'in; 2 in'di-fūs'in, n. A brown amorphous compound ($C_{16}H_{12}N_2O_3$) formed by the action of dilute acids on indican. [< INDICAN + L. fuscus, dusky.]

in'di-fus'cone, 1 in'di-fus'ōn; 2 in'di-fūs'ōn, n. Chem. A constituent of crude indigo ($C_{32}H_{18}O_4N_4$). It is a dark-brown powder. [< INDIFUSCIN.]

in'di-gence, 1 in'di-jəns; 2 in'di-ʒɛns, n. The state of being indigent; poverty; penury. [F., < L. indigentia, < indigen(t-)s; see INDIGENT.] In'di-gen-cy†. SYN.: see POVERTY.

in'di-gene, 1 in'di-jin; 2 in'di-ʒēn, n. A person, animal, or thing native to the soil; an aboriginal; autochthon.

So the Aryan population of Hindostan seems to have drunken up a great part of the dark Dravidian indigenes, and to have perpetuated their memory in the dark complexion of the modern Hindus. WINCHELL Preadamites p. 79. [S. C. & CO. 1890.]

in'di-gen't-ʟy, 1 in'di-jen't-li; 2 in'di-ʒɛn't-ly, n. [Rare.] The quality of being indigenous. in-dig'e-nous-ness†.

in-dig'e-nous, 1 in-dij'-nəs; 2 in-dig'e-nəs, a. 1. Originating in a (specified) region or country; native; hence, figuratively, innate; inherent. in-dig'e-nal†.

No horses which I have ever seen are so hardy as these little animals, writes Lieutenant Kirkpatrick among the Nepalese.

F. G. BURNABY Ride to Khiva ch. 16, p. 127. [P. 1877.]

in-dig'e-nous-ʟy, adv. Without exterior or foreign aid.

in'di-gent, 1 in'di-jent; 2 in'di-ʒɛnt, a. 1. Destitute of property or means of comfortable subsistence; needy; poor. 2†. Lacking; wanting: with of. [F., < L. indigen(t-)s, ppr. of indigeo, be in want, < indu (< in), in, + egeo, want.] —in'di-gent-ʟy, adv.

in'di-gest', 1 in'di-jest'; 2 in'di-ʒɛst', n. [Rare.] I. t. To fail or neglect to digest. II. i. To fail to be digested.

in'di-gest'ed, 1 in'di-jes'təd; 2 in'di-ʒɛs'təd, a. 1. Undigested; crude; shapeless; confused.

in'di-gest'ed-ness, 1 in'di-jes'təd-nəs; 2 in'di-ʒɛs'təd-nɛs, n. Undigested.

in'di-gest'ed, 1 in'di-jest'od; 2 in'di-ʒɛst'ed, a. 1. Not digested, in any sense of the word. 2. Disordered; unfinished; chaotic; shapeless. — adv. Undigested.

in'di-gest'-bl(e', 1 in'di-jes't-bl; 2 in'di-ʒɛst'-bl, a. 1. Not digestible, or difficult to digest; hence, not capable of assimilation by the mind. 2. Incapable of being digested; unarranged; unclassified; as, indigestible facts. —in'di-gest'i-bil'i-ty, n. -i-bl(e-ness†.—i-bl-ʟy, adv.

in'di-gest'i-ble, n. Something which is not digestible.

in'di-ges'tion, 1 in'di-jes'chən; 2 in'di-ʒɛs'chon, n. 1. Defective digestion; want or failure in the alimentary canal in changing food into absorptive nutriment; dyspepsia.

Gluttony chastises the glutton. . . . Indigestion is charged . . . with preaching morality to stomachs. HUGO Les Misérables tr. by Isabel Hapgood Fantine bk. iii, p. 219. [T. Y. C.]

2. The condition of being undigested or immature. 3. Pathol. Atonic dyspepsia. [< F. indigestion, < L. in-, not; and see DIGESTION.—acid indigestion, hyperchlorhydria.—intestinal I., faulty digestion of food after passing from the stomach.—in'di-ges'tive(ē, a. Suffering from or tending to indigestion; dyspeptic.

in'di-gir'ka, 1 in'di-gir'kə; 2 in'di-gir'ka, n. A river in Yakutsk government, Siberia; 700 m. to the Arctic ocean.

in'di-git, 1 in'di-jit, v. t. To point to; to indicate; to make signs or count. II. i. [Rare.] Anat. To interlock, as the fingers of two hands, or a muscle and tendon.—in-dig'i-ta'tion, n.

in'di-glu'cin, 1 in'di-glu'sin; 2 in'di-glū'sin, n. A colorless or figat-yellow sweet compoun t ($C_{14}H_{32}O_9$) derived from indican. [< Gr. indikon (glykys), indigo (sweet).]

in-dig'nant, 1 in-dig'nənt; 2 in-dig'nant, a. 1. Having such anger and scorn as is aroused by meanness or wickedness; displeased; feeling that one is treated unworthiness; as, an indignant guest. 2. Manifesting or provoked by such a feeling; as, an indignant protest. [< L. indignan(t-)s, ppr. of *indigno*r, < in-, not, + dignor, worth.] —in-dig'nant-ʟy, adv.

in'dig-na'tion, 1 in'dig-nē'shən; 2 in'dig-nā'shon, n. 1. The state of being indignant; a feeling involving anger mingled with contempt or disgust, aroused by injustice, meanness, etc.

At the bottom of virtuous indignation seads of envy, jealousy, and uncharitableness too often lurk.

CHRISTIAN REID Picked from Poverty Hill p. 336. [A. 1875.]

2. The effects of such feeling, as shown in retribution or punishment. 3†. Contempt or disdain. [F., < L. indignatio(n-), < indignor; see INDIGNANT.] in-dig'nance†; in-dig'ni-ty, n.

SYN.: see ANGER. Compare HATRED; IMPATIENCE.—Indignation meeting, a public meeting to express formal indignation at something done or to be done.

in-dig'ni-ty, n. Indignation; manifesting Indignation.

in-dig'ni-ty, 1 in-dig'ni-ti; 2 in-dig'ni-ty, n. [–TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tiş, pl.] 1. An act or action designed or tending to abase; unmerited contemptuous conduct or treatment; insult.

When I am dead, let not indignity Insult these poor remains.

JOHN BROWN Barbarossa act v, sc. 2.

2†. Base character or conduct; anger aroused by such character or conduct. [< L. indignita(t-)s, < indignus, unworthy, < in-, not, + dignus, worthy.] SYN.: see OFFENSE; OUTRAGE.

in'di-go, 1 in'di-go; 2 in'di-gō, n. 1. A blue coloring-substance ($C_{16}H_{10}N_2O_2$) obtained by the decomposition of indican, a glucosid contained in the indigo-plant. Its production by synthesis from coal-tar was accomplished by Adolph Baeyer and Kopp in 1870. It is now artificially prepared for commercial use from naphthalene. The crude indigo of commerce contains about 50 per cent. of pure indigo together with indirubin, indifuvin, indirein, indigotin, etc. Indigo finds extensive use as a dyestuff, coloring cotton, wool, and silk dark-blue. Mixed with oil, it forms a paint of great body, but one easily decomposed by impure air.

On exposure to the air, the white indigo is reconverted into insoluble indigo-blue.

ELIOT AND STORER Inorganic Chemistry p. 199. [L. B. & CO.]

2. A deep violet-blue: one of the seven so-called colors of the rainbow. See SPECTRUM. 3. An indigo-plant. [< Sp. indigo, < L. indicum, < Gr. indikon, neut. of indikos; see INDIC.] —I. bird, —American Indigo bird, same as WILD INDIGO.—animal I., the blue product obtained in the oxidation of indican or indoxyl contained in the urine.—artificial I., an indigo dye obtained from coal-tar products.—bastard I., see FALSE INDIGO, 1. blue I.†.—Chinese green I., same as LOKAO.—Chinese I., a half-shrubby plant (Isatis indigotica) of the mustard family, taking the place in northern China of the common indigo-plant of the south.—Egyptian I., an Egyptian and Nubian plant (Tephrosia apollinea) of the bean family, furnishing a kind of indigo. An ointment made of its seeds is used to heal the wounds of camels.—false I. 1. A tall shrub (Amorpha fruticosa) of the bean family, growing along river-banks from the Atlantic to the Rocky Mountains, with unequally pinnate dotted leaves, with 8 to 12 leaflets, and violet or purple flowers in terminal spikes. 2. A smooth, tall, stout perennial herb (Baptisia australis) of the bean family, growing in the middle and southern United States, with trifoliolate leaves, and erect many-flowered racemes of indigo-blue flowers.—wild I.†.—fragrant false I., a low-growing northwestern American herb (Amorpha nana). dwarf false I.†.—gallinil I., a dye obtained by treating gallinil violet with anilin.—Indian I., same as INDIGO, 1.—Java I., an indigo-plant used in indigo-dyeing.—in'di-go-ber'ry, n. The fruit of a West-Indian shrub (Randia aculeata) of the madder family, which yields a blue dye.—I. bird, the male painted finch (Passerina cyanea) the male of which is mainly a brilliant indigo-blue and the female brownish. i.-bunting†; -finch†, —I. blue, the blue coloring-substance of crude indigo; pure indigo.—I. brown, same as INDIGO-BROWN.—I. direin.—I. carmine, a dyestuff ($C_{16}H_8N_2O_8$) prepared by the action of strong sulfuric acid on indigo, and used to dye cotton, "Alizarin" blue.—I. colorin.—I. crimson, same as COCCELITTE.—I. extract, n. A violet-blue pigment obtained by treating indigo with sulfuric acid.—I. gelatin, n. A gelatinous solution of indigo-blue and sulfuric acid.—I. glutenɪ., I. green, a greenish substance obtained from indigo by adding potash to an alcoholic solution of an alkaline hyposulfite(Watts, Dict. of Arts.]—I.-plant, n. A plant yielding indigo; especially, (1) any plant of the genus Indigofera (see LEGUMINOSÆ), and (2) a West-Indian shrub (I. anil) 5 or 6 feet high, with short and thick pods. Both plants have been introduced into other warm countries.—Japanese I.-plant, a polygonaceous plant (Polygonum tinctorium) found in eastern Asia. It yields a bluish dye.—I. pulp, Leaves and Flowers of the Indigo-plant (Indigofera tinctoria) a, a fruit-pod.

I. red†.—I. salt, n. Yellow crystals of the manufacture of indigo blue.—I. sapphire, n. A dark sapphire found in Australia and Ceylon.—I. snake, n. The gopher-snake (Spilotes couperi), dusky black above shading into reddish-brown below, yellowish on the throat, and sometimes 10 feet long.—I. substitute, a black copper-salt dye.—I.-vat, n. A vat in which materials are dyed with indigo, or the dye itself.—I. white, a colorless compound ($C_{16}H_{12}N_2O_2$) obtained by reducing indigo blue.—native I. [Austral.] Any plant of the genus Sarcolæna of the heath family.—I. in Tasmania, a congener (Indigofera australis) of the indigo of commerce.—Paraguay I., a blue dye made from the leaves of Indigofera anil.—prairie I., a North-western American wild indigo (Baptisia alba), having white flowers.—reduced I., same as INDIGO WHITE.—soluble blue I., sulfindigotic acid.—vat I., indigo dye prepared in a reducing vat, as opposed to that made from indigo extract.—wild I., a species of Baptisia (B. tinctoria) with yellow flowers, common everywhere in the woods of the United States, and used as a substitute for indigo.—wood I., same as in'di-go'fer-ous, a. That bears or yields indigo.—in'di-go-gen, n. Same as INDIGO WHITE. in'di-go-gen't, —in'di-go-ʒɛn', n. Chem. —in'di-go-gen'ic, a. —in'di-go-ʒɛn'ic, a. —in'di-go-gen'ic-ʟy, —in'di-go-ʒɛn'ic-ly, adv. —in'di-go-gen'ic-ness, n. —in'di-go-ʒɛn'ic-nɛs, n. —in'di-go-ru'bin, n. Same as URROGDIN.

in'di-go'fer-a, 1 in'di-gof'er-ə; 2 in'di-gōf'er-ə, n. Bot. An immense mainly tropical genus of herbaceous or shrubby plants of the bean family, with mostly odd-pinnate leaves and racemes or spikes of rose or purple flowers; Indian indigo. See blue indigo, 1, and wild indigo, bean.

in'di-gold, 1 in'di-gold; 2 in'di-gōld, a. Chem. Of or pertaining to indigo dye.

in'di-hu'min, 1 in'di-hjū'mən; 2 in'di-hū'min, n. A brown compound ($C_{12}H_{13}NO_3$) obtained when indican is decomposed. [< INDIGO + HUMUS.]

in'di-leu'cin, 1 in'di-lū'sin; 2 in'di-lū'sin, n. Chem. A compound isomeric with indigo blue, obtained in reducing with zinc-dust and acetic acid. [< INDICAN + Gr. leukos, white.]

in'di-men'si-bl(e', a. [Rare.] Immeasurable.

in'di-men'sion-ed, a. That has no dimensions; that can not be measured.

in'di-min'ish-a-bl(e'), a. Incapable of being diminished.

in'din, 1 in'din; 2 in'din, n. A rose-colored crystalline compound ($C_{16}H_{10}O_2$) obtained from indigo blue, and prepared by heating isatan. [< INDIGO.] in'dine†.

in'di-o, 1 in'di-o; 2 in'di-ō, n. [Sp.] 1. A native, especially one formerly of the West Indies or Americas. 2. A Portuguese coin of the year 1499. [< L. indissolubilis, < in-, not; and see DISSOLUBLE.]—in"dis-solv'a-bil(ĕ"i-ty. SYN.: see IMMORTAL.—in-dis'so-lu-bil"i-ty, in-dis'so-lu-bl(e-ness?, n.—in"dis-solv'a-bl(e-ness?.—in-dis'so-lu-bly, adv.

in-dis'so-lute, a. [Rare.] Not dissolved or broken.

in"dis-tinct', 1 in'dis-tinkt'; 2 in"dis-tinkt', a. 1. Not clearly distinguishable by senses or intellect; not plainly appearing or clearly perceptible as an individual thing; confused; dim; vague; obscure; as, an indistinct sound; an indistinct idea.

And those who spoke uttered their thoughts only in low and indistinct whispers.
COOPER Pilot p. 199. [v. v. c.]

2. Not presenting clear and well-defined images or impressions; obscured; dim; as, indistinct vision; an indistinct recollection. 3. [Rare.] Indiscriminate. [< L. indistinctus, < in-, not; and see DISTINCT.] SYN.: see AMBIGUOUS; EQUIVOCAL; OBSCURE.—in"dis-tinct'ly, adv.

in"dis-tinc'tive, n. 1. Want of distinction; indiscrimination; confusion. 2. Equality of rank or condition. 3. [Rare.] Implicitness.

in"dis-tinc'tive,] a. 1. Having no distinguishing quality. [ity 2. Incapable of distinguishing.

in"dis-tinct'ness, n. 1. Lack of distinctness; obscurity; faintness.

The obscurity which reigns so much among many metaphysical writers is, for the most part, owing to the indistinctness of their own conception.
BLAIR Rhetoric p. 93. [e. p. 1817.]

2. Psychol. Lack of qualities necessary for the purpose of making a clear distinction; indistinguishableness.

in"dis-tin'guish-a-bl(ĕ', a. Incapable of being distinguished or separated.—in"dis-tin'guish-a-bl(e-ness?, n.—in"dis-tin'guish-a-bly, adv.

Then did they begin to indite themself indite,
And hold my hand, while I did write.
HERBERT The Temple, Assurance st. 5.

The meaning of indite seems to have been influenced by the related words dictate, indicate, indict. [< OF. inditer, < L. indicto; see INDICT.] en-dit'en†; en-dyte'†; in-dyte'†.—in-dite'ment, n.—in-dit'er, n.

in"di-um, 1 in'di-um; 2 in"dĭ-um, n. A soft malleable silver-white metallic element. See ELEMENT.

Indium . . . was discovered in 1863, by Reich and Richter, by the aid of spectrum analysis.
Prof. Roscoe Reyher Inorg. Chem. tr. by E. F. Smith Metals group iii, p. 253. [e. p. & co. 1883.]

in"di-vid'ed, a. Undivided.

in"di-vid'u-al, 1 in'di-vij'u-al or -vid'yu-al; 2 in"dĭ-vij'u-al or -vid'yu-al, a. 1. (1) Not susceptible of logical division; determinate in all respects, when considered by itself. (2) Not capable of actual division without loss of the characters essential to its existence.

Who knows the individual hour in which His habits were first sown, even as a seed?
WORDSWORTH The Prelude bk. ii, st. 6.

2. Pertaining to one particular person or thing; distinctive; as, individual peculiarities.

Of all men nearly perfect, Sir Thomas More had, perhaps, the clearest and most individual character.
MACKINTOSH Works, More in vol. i, p. 502. [e. g. & co. 1854.]

in"di-vid'u-al, n. Anything indivisible or undivided or separated into parts without losing its identity; that which has definite and continuous existence; a person, animal, or thing; especially, a human being; person.

Each individual seems to exist in pursuance, not of their intrinsic merit, but to their relation to the State. J. R. SEELEY Expansion of England course i, p. 7. [a. 2nos. 1883.]

2. Metaph. (1) An independent being, capable of existing alone. (2) As defined by Hegel, an existence which actualizes some idea, or universal, in a unique and complete fashion; a separate reality, regarded as the product of the energy of the universal. 3. Biol. (1) An organism which has acquired a separate existence by birth, budding, fission, or the like. (2) A shoot or bud of a plant, a polyp of a coelenterate, or the like. (3) The entire product of an impregnated ovum or seed.

No doubt it is impossible to speak of a "stock" of individuals, for example, as parts of one morphological individual.
HUXLEY Anat. Invert. intro., p. 37. [a. 1888.]

in"di-vid'u-al-ism, 1 in'di-vij'u-[or -vid'yu-]al-izm; 2 in"dĭ-vij'u-[or -vid'yu-]al-ĭzm, n. 1. The quality of being separate or individual, or of having individuality. 2. Personal peculiarity; individuality of character; eccentricity; also, a personal peculiarity; idiosyncrasy. 3. A tendency or attitude, in religion, ethics, or politics, favoring the liberty of the individual: opposed to socialism and to theocratic hierarchism.

Religious individualism lays but little stress on definite creeds or on external religious authority. Ethical i. teaches that the individual reason is the supreme moral authority. Political i. teaches that government is at best a necessary evil, and would reduce the function of the state to the minimum consistent with social order and peace.

Individualism rests on the principle that a man shall be his own master.
D. DAPER Conflict bet. Religion and Science p. 295. [a. 1874.]

4. Excessive self-interest; selfishness. 5. Philos. (1) The logical doctrine that individual things are the only real existences: a phase of realistic nominalism. (2) The doctrine that only the individual ego with its changes and states exists; egoism. 6. Biol. A principle of organism differing from each of the composing symbionts. See SYMBIOSIS.

in"di-vid'u-al-ist, 1 in'di-vij'u-[or -vid'yu-]al-ist; 2 in"dĭ-vij'u-[or -vid'yu-]al-ĭst, n. 1. One given to independent thought and action; an egoist. 2. An adherent of individualism.—in"di-vid'u-al-is'tic, a. Of, pertaining to, or characterized by individualism. in"di-vid'u-al-ist'i-cal.

in"di-vid'u-al-ize,] in'di-vij'u-[or -vid'yu-]al-aiz; 2 in"dĭ-vij'u-[or -vid'yu-]al-ĭz, vt. [-IZED'; -IZ'ING.] 1. To confer particular characteristics upon; distinguish; as, the style which individualizes an author. 2. To select or mark as individual; note the peculiar properties of; particularize. in"di-vid'u-al-ized.

It is not the easiest matter in the world to define and individualize a character like this which we are now handling HAWTHORNE Modern Argia Dorothea vol. i, p. 4. [a. & co. 1890.]

—in"di-vid"u-al-i-za'tion, n. The act of individualizing, or the state of being individualized.—in"di-vid'u-al-iz"er or -is"er, n.

in"di-vid'u-al-ly,] in'di-vij'u-[or -vid'yu-]al-i; 2 in"dĭ-vij'u-[or -vid'yu-]al-y, adv. 1. In an individual manner; separately; as, individually, I like him. 2. Specially and exclusively; as, a tone heard individually in Browning. 3†. Undividedly; inseparably. SYN.: see ALONE.

in"di-vid'u-and,] in'di-vij'u-[or -vid'yu-]end; 2 in"dĭ-vij'u-[or -vid'yu-]and, a. Scholastic Philos. Capable of being or about to be made individual or an individual.

in"di-vid'u-ate,] in'di-vij'u-[or -vid'yu-]eit; 2 in"dĭ-vij'u-[or -vid'yu-]āt, vt. [-AT'ED; -AT'ING.] 1. To make individually marked or distinct; distinguish from others; individualize. 2. To bring into existence as an individual, and especially as an individual (what was previously general): a term used by scholastic and other realists. [< LL. individuatus, pp of individuo, < L. individuus; see INDIVIDUAL.] in"di-vid'u-a-ty†.

in"di-vid"u-a'tion,] in'di-vij'u-[or -vid'yu-]ē'shon; 2 in"dĭ-vij'u-[or -vid'yu-]ā'shon, n. 1. The giving of prominence to individuals as such, in any system of thought or of practise.

The growth of society takes place under a rhythmical movement between individuation and organization.
J. BASCOM Sociology p. 197. [c. p. r. 1887.]

2. The production of individuals; specif., the origin of individuals by the addition of individual difference to general or specific forms or natures. 3. (1) An expression of the causes by which an individual organism is supported and preserved. (2) The amalgamation of two separate representative organisms into one complete entirety. 4. Metaph. The differentiation of the individual from the universal and from every other individual. The principle of individuation formed a subject of dispute among medieval Scholastics. Thomas Aquinas and Albert the Great held it to reside in matter and quantity; Duns Scotus taught that a special form, or formative force, is responsible for the individuality of any distinct being; and Leibnitz evolved his famous principle of the identity of indiscernibles as an answer to the same problem. This problem reappears in modern times in the attempt to adjust the claims of mere will or blind force, and intelligence or formative idea, in accounting for the origin and development of the individual. [< LL. individuatio(n-), < individuo; see INDIVIDUATE.]

in"di-vid'u-um,] in'di-vij'u-[or -vid'yu-]um; 2 in"dĭ-vij'u-[or -vid'yu-]ŭm, n. [Pl. -A, that which is not divided; an atom. 2. An individual being. [L., neut. of individuus; see INDIVIDUAL.]

in"di-vis'i-bl(eĕ', 1 in'di-viz'i-bl; 2 in"dĭ-vĭz'i-bl, a. 1. That can not be divided; not separable into parts. 2. Math. Not capable of exact division, as all prime numbers and some fractions. 3. Law. Not capable of being fulfilled in part: said of contracts, where the consideration is entire and part of it illegal [< LL. indivisibilis, < in-, not; and see DIVISIBLE.] —in"di-vis'i-bil"i-ty, n.—in"di-vis'i-bl(e-ness?.—in"di-vis'i-bly, adv.

in"di-vis'i-bl(ĕ's, n. That which is indivisible; specif., in geometry, a quantity supposed to be incapable of division, owing to its smallness: a former incorrect conception of an infinitesimal.

in"di-vi'sion, n. [Rare.] The state of being without division.

Ind. Meth., abbr. Independent Methodists.

in"do-, Derived from indigo or indol: a combining form used in chemistry.

In"do-,] in'do-; 2 in"dō-. [2] The 2d invasion: race formerly extended from Brahmaputra river to Gulf of Tongking, including western and southern China.

[3] The latest invasion: race extends from Himalayas to western China and from central Asia to south of Burmas.

in-doc'ĭ-bl(e², 1 in-dŏs'ĭ-bl; 2 in-dŏc'ĭ-bl, a. Not capable of being taught; indocile. [< LL. indocibilis, < ĭn-, not, + docibilis, teachable; < lu. docēre, teach.] — in-doc'ĭ-bĭl'ĭ-ty, n. in-doc'ĭ-bl(e-nĕss², n.

in-doc'ĭl(e², 1 in-dŏs'ĭl; 2 in-dŏc'ĭl (xiii), a. Not easily instructed; especially, unwilling to submit to instruction; intractable. [< L. indocilis, < ĭn-, not; and see DOCILE.]

The English have ever been as indocile in acknowledging the rules of criticism, even during the most ordinary acquaintance, as the Italians and French have been voluntarily obedient. HALLAM Lit. Europe vol. i, p. 233. [A. 1854.]

in-doc'tĭr-i-nate, 1 in-dŏk'tĭr-nĕt; 2 in-dŏc'tĭr-i-nāt, vt. [-NAT'ED; -NAT'ING.] To instruct in doctrines or principles in general, or in those of some one branch of learning or system of belief; instruct; teach.

The people who compose our churches are not so well indoctrinated as their fathers were in the fundamentals of the faith. AUSTIN PHELPS My Portfolio p. 155. [a. 1882.]

[< IN-[1] + L. doctrīna, see DOCTRINE, and -ATE[1].] — in-doc'tĭr-in-tzĕ; in-doc'trine†. — in-doc'tĭr-na'tĭon, n. The act of indoctrinating, or the state of being indoctrinated; instruction. in-doc'tĭr-ni-za'tĭon†. — in-doc'tĭr-na'tor, n.

in'do-Dutch', I. a. Of or pertaining to India and Holland. II. n. Dutch natives or residents of India.— in'do-Egyp'tĭan, a. Possessing the qualities and traits of the natives of both Egypt and India.

in'do-Eur', abbr. Indo-European.

in'do-Eu'ro-pe'an, I. in'do-yū'rō-pē'ăn; 2 in'do-yŭ'rō-pē'ăn, a. Of or pertaining to a family of languages extending from India over Europe.

The extant languages show by their common roots and grammatical forms that they are descended from a single speech. This parent speech is lost; but theoretical roots and inflection-forms are recognized as parent speech, being such as will produce the surviving roots and forms by known laws of change; time, place, condition, and environment of the parent tribe are made out in the same way. See table under LANGUAGE. [< L. INDO- + EUROPEAN.]

in'do-form, 1 in'dō-fôrm; 2 in'dō-fŏrm, n. Chem. Trade name for the alleged methylene derivative of acetylanilic acid.

in'do-French', I. a. Of or pertaining to both India and France, or to French residents of India. II. n. pl. French natives or residents of India.

in'do-gæ'a, 1 in'dō-jĭ'ə; 2 in'dō-gē'a. n. Zoögeog. A primary terrestrial area or realm including India proper, Farther India, and the islands north of Wallace's line. [< INDO- + GR. gaïa, earth.] — in'do-gæ'an, a.

in'do-Gan-get'ĭc, a. Pertaining to the Indus and the Ganges; specif., the plain of northern India.

in'do-gen, 1 in'dō-jĕn, n. Chem. A divalent organic radical (C_8H_4NO) supposed to be the essential nucleus of indigo. [< INDIGO + -GEN.] in'do-gen'ĭ-, in-dog'e-nid, in-dog'e-nide, n. An organic compound formed by the action of aldehydes or ketonic acids upon indoxyl or indoxylcarboxyl and containing the group indogen.

in'do-Ger-man'ĭc, a. Pertaining to or designating the languages or family groups, better known as Indo-European. in'do-Ger'man.

in'do-Greek', I. a. 1. Relating to Greek residents of India. 2. Showing the influence of the early Greeks in India, especially in relation to sculptures and monuments. II. n. A descendant of the ancient Greek race resident in India.

in'do-in, 1 in'dō-ĭn; 2 in'dō-ĭn, n. An artificial organic coloring-material, resembling indigo blue, derived from compounds containing isatin. [< INDIGO.]

in'dol, 1 in'dōl or -dŏl; 2 in'dŏl or -dōl, n. A white crystalline compound (C_8H_7N) formed when indigo is distilled with zinc-dust, and also in certain albuminous compounds by fermentation. [< INDIGO + -OL.] in'dole.

in'do-lence, 1 in'dō-lens; 2 in'dō-lĕnç, n. 1. The state or quality of being indolent; indisposition to exertion, arising from a love of ease, or the resultant inaction; habitual idleness; laziness. 2. Freedom from pain or trouble; used only in medicine. [< L. indolentia, freedom from pain, < ĭn-, not, + dolent(-)s, ppr. of doleo, grieve.]

in'do-lent, 1 in'dō-lent; 2 in'dō-lĕnt, a. 1. Averse to exertion, or resulting from and showing such aversion; indisposed to labor; habitually inactive or idle. 2. Med. Without pain; sluggish; as, an indolent tumor; indolent ulcers. [< IN-[2] + L. dolent(-)s; see INDOLENCE.] SYN.: see IDLE.— in'do-lent-ly, adv.

in'do-les, 1 in'dō-lēz; 2 in'dō-lēs, n. [L.] [Rare.] Natural disposition, temperament, or character.

in'do-line, / A pale-yellow crystalline compound ($C_{16}H_{14}N_2$) derived from indigo white and polymeric with indol.

in'do-lĭ-none, 1 in'dō-lĭ-nōn; 2 in'dō-l-nōn, n. Same as OXINDOL.

In-dol'o-gy, 1 in-dŏl'ō-jĭ; 2 in-dŏl'ō-ġy, n. That branch of learning that treats of the history, language, literature, and customs of India. [< INDIA + -LOGY.] — in"do-lo'gĭ-an, n.

in'do-lold, 1 in'dō-lōid; 2 in'dō-lŏid, a. Relating to indol or more especially to its color.

In'do-Ma-lay' an, a. Pertaining to India and to the Malayan islands. In"do-Ma-lay'sĭ-an; — Indo-Malayan region (Zoögeog.), a region including the Malayan islands, Ceylon, Taiwan, Sumatra, Java, and Borneo, the Philippines, and the Malay Peninsula.

in-dom'e-tha-bl(e, 1 in-dŏm'ĕ-thā-bl; 2 in-dŏm'ĭ-ta-bl, a. Not to be subdued; untamable; unconquerable.

The indomitable spirit of English liberty is alike indomitable in every land where men of English race have set their feet as masters. FISKE Am. Polit. Ideas p. 121. [n. 1885.]

in'do-naph'thene, 1 in'dō-naf'thēn; 2 in'dō-naf'thēn, n. Chem. A hypothetical hydrocarbon radical (C_9H_8) that is an essential constituent of indol. [< INDOL + NAPHTHALENE.] — in'done, n. Chem. A ketone ($C_{11}H_8O$) identified by its haloid derivatives, dichlorodinaphthone and others.

In'do-ne'sĭ-a, 1 in'dō-nē'shĭ-ə; 2 in'dō-nē'shĭ-a, n. The Malay Peninsula and the islands of the Malay Archipelago.

In'do-ne'sĭan, 1 in'dō-nē'shĭən; 2 in'dō-nē'shan. I. a. Relating to those Malay tribes that inhabit, or originate in, the Battas of Sumatra, many of the Dyak tribes of Borneo, and others in the Philippines and the Molukkas. II. n. A member of one of these tribes. [< L. Indi, Indians (< GR. Indoi, < Indos, Indian), + Gr. nēsos, island.]

in-don'ga, n. Same as DONGA.

in'door', 1 in'dōr'; 2 in'dŏr', a. 1. Performed or being within doors; as, indoor work.

It is perhaps due to her DEAN. Browning's] years of indoor life that the influence of landscape-scenery is not more visible in her poetry. E. G. STEDMAN Victorian Poets p. 141. [a. 1875.]

2. [Local, Eng.] Toward the inside of a cylinder; as, the indoor stroke of a piston.

in'doors', 1 in'dōrz'; 2 in'dŏrz', adv. Into or within a building; as, he stayed indoors all day.

in'door-ness, n. 1. Pertaining to the Indian ocean and adjacent parts of the Pacific, or the parts thereof having tropical waters. 2. Relating to the group of languages, known as the Indo-Pacific, spoken in the islands of these waters, and in Australia.

In'do-pe-la'gĭ-a, 1 in'dō-pē-lā'jĭ-ə; 2 in'dō-pe-lā'ġi-a, n. A region in the Indian ocean north of the tropic of Capricorn, which extends from Australia and the Malay Archipelago on the east to the coast of Africa on the west.

in-do-phane, 1 in'dō-fān; 2 in'dō-fān, n. Chem. A blue organic compound ($C_{32}H_{18}N_2O_4$) resembling indigo, that is formed when potassium cyanid is added to an ammoniacal solution of nitrosaphenol.

in'do-phe'nin, 1 in'dō-fē'nĭn; 2 in'dō-fē'nin, n. Chem. A blue dye resulting from a combination of isatin and thiophen.— indophenin reaction, a reaction to test the presence of thiophene. The substance to be examined is first shaken with a 2 to 3 per cent. solution of isatin in concentrated sulfuric acid: should a greenish-blue or intense blue coloration develop, thiophene is indicated.

in'do-phe'nol, 1 in'dō-fē'nōl or -nŏl; 2 in'dō-fē'nōl or -nōl, n. One of a series of blue coloring compounds resembling indigo, formed by the oxidation of paraphenylene and a phenol: used for dyeing cotton and wool blue. [< INDIGO + PHENOL.] — indophenol preparation, same as LEUCOINDOPHENOL.

in-phlo'ĕm, 1 in'flō-ĕm; 2 in'flō-ĕm, n. Bot. Same as ENDOPHLOEM.

in'do-phĭle, 1 in'dō-fīl or -fĭl; 2 in'dō-fīl or -fĭl, n. An advocate or supporter of the interests of India and its natives. [< INDIA + Gr. philŏ, love.] — in-doph'ĭ-lism, n.

in'do-phĭn, 1 in'dō-fĭn; 2 in'dō-fĭn, n. A compound of indoxyl and indoxylic acid, used in calico-printing.

in-dore', 1 in-dōr'; 2 in-dŏr', n. 1. A native state in central India; the capital of this state; Indore. 2. A city in the state of Mahrátta family under the supervision of an English resident or agent. 3. Its capital.

indorse', 1 in-dōrs'; 2 in-dŏrs', vt. [IN-DORSED', IN-DORSING; IN-DORS'ING.] [Indorse is the spelling formerly (following the medieval Latin) and still preferably used in law and commerce; literary use has more commonly followed the English.] To ratify and give sanction to; confirm; approve; as, to indorse a statement. SYN.: see ENDORSE. 4. [Archaic.] To place a burden on the back of.

This affliction . . . seems to us not at all less dreadful than that of Sinbad when indorsed with the old man of the sea. THACKERAY Paris Sketch Book p. 50. [a. 1840.]

5. [Archaic.] To place a name on the back of; specif., to write one's name, with or without other words, (1) on the back of (a paper or instrument), for the purpose of filling of a record, or (2) over or across (a note, check, or bill of exchange), to assign it or guarantee its payment. See INDORSEMENT. 2. Figuratively, to give sanction to; confirm; approve; as, to indorse a statement.

St. Her. To be as ENDORSE. 4. [Archaic.] To place a burden on the back of.

This affliction . . . seems to us not at all less dreadful than that of Sinbad when indorsed with the old man of the sea. THACKERAY Paris Sketch Book p. 50. [a. 1840.]

[< LL. indorso, < L. in, on, + dorsum, back.] SYN.: see ACKNOWLEDGE; CONFESS; JUSTIFY.— in-dors a-bl(e², a. Fitted to be indorsed.— in'dor-sa'tor, n. One to whom transference by indorsement is made.— in-dors'er, n. One who indorses, especially for the purpose of transfer. in-dors'or.

indorsery, n. Her. A bordure ordinary, one-fourth or one-eighth of the pale. [< INDORSE, v.] in-dorse'ment, 1 in-dōrs'ment or -ment; 2 in-dŏrs'ment. n. 1. The writing of one's name on the back of a note, bill of exchange, or other negotiable instrument, etc. The act or method by which bills, notes, and other negotiable instruments are transferred.

The payee . . . may by indorsement . . . assign over his whole property. BLACKSTONE Commentaries p. 468.

3. Any writing on the back of a document; superscription; docketing. 4. Crim. Law. A writing by a justice or judge in one jurisdiction on a warrant of arrest issued in another jurisdiction, in order that it may be executed in the former jurisdiction. 5. The act of ratification; sanction; assurance; approval.

O day most calm, most bright! . . . Th' indorsement of supreme delight. HERBERT Sunday st. 1.

— absolute indorsement (Com.), an indorsement compelling the indorser to pay only on the failure of the prior persons concerned, and after having received due notice.— accommodation l., the indorsement of a bill, without consideration, to enable some one to raise money on it.— general l., an indorsement in blank; an indorsement made prior to filling in specifications on business paper.— l. without recourse, the transfer of a negotiable note or bill of exchange by the holder under his indorsement without assuming responsibility as an indorser, indicated by writing "without recourse" over his name.— qualified l., an indorsement expressing a restriction, enlargement, or modification of the indorser's liability, as "without recourse on me" or "waiving demand or notice."

In"do-Sar"a-cen ĭc, a. Of or pertaining to products of mixed Indian and Saracenic origin.— Indo-Saracenic architecture, see MOHAMMEDAN.— In"do-Scyth'ĭ-an, a. Of, pertaining to, or possessing the attributes of the natives of India and Scythia.— In"do-Spar'ĭsh, a. Of, pertaining to, or possessing the traits of the Anglo-Indians and the Spaniard.— In"do-Teu-ton'ĭc, a. Indo-Germanic.

in'do-type, 1 in'dō-tīp; 2 in'dō-tīp, n. A plate or illustration produced by the gelatin process: a name not now in use. [< INDIA INK + TYPE[1].] in'do-tĭnt†.

in-dow', in-dow'ment. See ENDOW, etc.

in-dox'yl, in-dŏks'ĭl; 2 in-dŏks'ĭl, n. Chem. An oily liquid compound (C_8H_7NO) isomeric with oxindol. [< INDIGO + HYDROXYL.] — in"dox-yl'ĭc, a. 1. Designating a colorless, crystalline acid ($C_6H_4NO.CO_2H$) obtained by reducing ethylorthonitrophenylpropiolic acid. in-dox'yl-car-box-yl'ĭc. 2. Of or pertaining to indoxyl.

In'dra, 1 in'drə; 2 in'dra, n. [Sans.] In early Hindu mythology the god of the firmament and of rain.

Indra.

In the Vedas he is a god of the first rank, in later mythology he is the king of heaven and lord of the gods, but he afterward falls to a second rank. In the Puranas he often appears as a mischievous and deceitful god. In Buddhism, as Inda, he is king of the Devas, but subservient to Buddha. In the Avesta he appears as Andra, as one of the DEVAS or evil spirits. Indra is represented as clothed in a red robe studded with 1,000 eyes or armed with a thunderbolt and anax, and riding on elephant.

— Indra's heaven, Anglo-Ind.], alto-circus or alto-cumulus clouds.

in'draft', \ 1 in'draft'; 2 in'- in'draught', / dräft', n. [Rare.] The act of drawing in, or that which is drawn in; an inward flow; as, an indraft of air. 2†. An inlet.

in-draper, vt. [Rare.] To adorn or cover as with drapery.

in-draw', 1 in-drô'; 2 in-drą', vi. To draw inward.

in'drawn', 1 in'drôn'; 2 in'drąn', a. Drawn in; breathed in; uttered with accompanying breath; hence, abstracted; preoccupied; as, an indrawn sigh.

In'dre, 1 an'dr; 2 ăn'dr, n. 1. A river in the Indre and Indre-et-Loire departments, rising in the Loire river, 115 m. 2. A department in central France; 2,686 sq. m.; capital, Châteauroux.

In'dre-et-Loire', 1 an'drē-ā-lwär'; 2 ăn'drē-e-lwär', n. A department in N. central France; 2,377 sq. m.; capital, Tours.

in-drench't, vt. To drench or drown.

in'dris, 1 in'drĭs; 2 in'drĭs, n. 1. An indusine lemur of Madagascar; specif., Indris brevicaudata, with exserted ears and rudimentary tail, and usually parti-colored black. The leg is almost as long as the spinal column, while the arm is 1½ times as long. The native name is Babakoto [literally, boy], but when discovered by Sonnerat, the French naturalist, in 1780, the exclamation of the natives, indry! [there he is!], was mistaken by him for the name of the animal, and "Indri" or "Indris" [a.] A genus typical of Indrisinæ.

Indris (Indris brevicaudata). 1/20

In'drĭ-sĭ'næ, 1 in'drĭ-sĭ'nē; 2 in'drĭ-sĭ'nę, n. pl. Mam. A Madagascan subfamily of lemurs, with 30 teeth and long hind limbs with normal tarsi. [< INDRIS.] — In'drĭ-sin(e§, a.

Ind. T., abbr. Indian Territory (official).

in-du'bĭ-ous, in-dū'bĭ-o-us-ly, etc. See IN-[2].

in'du'bĭ-ta-bl(e², 1 in'dū'bĭ-tə-bl; 2 in'dū'bĭ-ta-bl, a. Too plain or fully proved to admit of doubt; unquestionably true; certain; as, indubitable evidence. [< L. indubitabilis, < ĭn-, not, + dubitabilis, doubtable, < dubito; see DUBITATE.]

SYN.: see INCONTESTABLE; MANIFEST.— in-du'bĭ-ta-bl(e², n. That which is indubitable.— in-du'bĭ-ta-bl(e-nĕss², n.— in-du'bĭ-ta-bly, adv.— in-du'bĭ-tate†, vt. To cause to be doubted.— in-du'bĭ-ta-tĭve-ly§, adv. [Rare.]

in-duce', 1 in-dūs'; 2 in-dūç', vt. [IN-DUCED'; IN-DUC'ING.] 1. To influence to an act or course of conduct; lead by persuasion or reasoning; use motives; prevail on; as, to induce a man to stop drinking.

That chivalrous courage which induces us . . . to rush in the face of certain danger for the sake of victory. IRVING Sketch-Book, Indian Character p. 350. [a. P. P. 1861.]

2. To bring on; lead to or produce; cause; as, a sickness induced by fatigue. 3. Physics. To produce by electric or magnetic influence. 4. Logic. To reach a conclusion by an inductive process of reasoning: opposed to deduce. 5†. To lead in; bring forward; introduce. 6†. To draw on or over; place upon. [< L. induco, < ĭn, in, + duco, lead.] SYN.: see ABDUCT; DRAW.— in-duc'ed-ly, adv.— in-duc'ĭv(e§, a. [Rare.]

in-duce'ment, 1 in-dūs'ment or -ment; 2 in-dūç'ment, n. 1. Anything, as an argument, reason, threat, or fact, that determines or disposes to a course of act; incentive; motive; as, he was offered special inducements to go.

The annual overflow of a river became the irresistible inducement to a regular system of husbandry practice. C. W. HOSKYNS Hist. Agriculture ancient period, p. 14. [a. a. P. 1849.]

2. The act of inducing or persuading. 3. Law. In pleading, the preamble, or explanatory introduction to the particular matter and allegations that follow. SUBPLEADER. 4†. A preamble. SYN.: see BAIT; MOTIVE.

in-duc'er, 1 in-dūs'er; 2 in-dūç'er, n. One who induces.

in-du'cĭ-æ, 1 in-dū'shĭ-ē; 2 in-dū'shĭ-ę, n. pl. 1. [L.] Scots Law. The days allowed between the citation of a defendant and his appearance in the action. 2. Internat. Law. The stopping of hostilities; an armistice, or an agreement for such. 3. Rom. & Civil Law. A delay granted or allowed before the performance of certain obligations.

in-duc'ĭ-bl(e², 1 in-dūs'ĭ-bl; 2 in-dūç'ĭ-bl, a. 1. That may be concluded by inductive process. 2. That may be induced or brought to pass.

in-duct', 1 in-dukt'; 2 in-dŭct', vt. 1. To put in enjoyment or possession; especially, to introduce into possession of an office or benefice, with the customary ceremonies; install. 2. To bring in; initiate.

She became . . . inducted into most of the secrets of the family. THACKERAY Vanity Fair p. 80. [U. P. CO.]

3. To obtain by induction; as, to induct physical laws. See INDUCTION.

Others think that when the principles [involved in so-called antinomies] are carefully inducted and expressed, the contradiction disappears. K.-F. Vocab. Philos. p. 33. [SH. & CO. 1878.]

in-duc'tance, 1 in-duk'tans; 2 ĭn-dŭc'tanç, n. Elec. 1. Capacity for magnetic induction. 2. Self-induction, or the coefficient of self-induction.— in-duc'tance-coil", n. Same as CHOKING-COIL.— i.-reactance, n. Reactance shown by an induction-coil as distinguished from a condenser.— i.-shunt, n. Elec. A wire coil, with or without an iron core, used as a shunt. Its impedance is greater than the resistance on account of its self-induction.— localized i. (Elec.), in a circuit, the inductance introduced by wire coils as distinct from that which the circuit itself distributes.— mutual i., the coefficient of mutual induction. See UNIT OF INDUCTANCE.

in-duc'tion, 1 in-duk'shən; 2 ĭn-dŭc'shon, n. 1. The process of inducing or bringing in a conclusion or an event by some particular path or course of reasoning. 2. The process of inferring or aiming at the general from observation of the particular. Specif.: (1) Logic. The inference of a specific law of causational connection or sequence from the observation and analysis of some particular instance or instances. Compare DEDUCTION.

Induction is of two general kinds: (1) formal, logical, or so-called perfect induction (strictly not induction at all, but enumeration), in which it is necessary that every particular case should be enumerated, and (2) philosophical or imperfect induction, in which a general law is obtained from less than the entire number of cases, through confidence that a causal relation underlies the sameness of those cases. The result of formal induction is mathematically accurate; that of philosophical induction is subject to modification as new cases are observed. The latter is the process of science used in establishing natural laws from observation and experiment. See INDUCTIVE METHOD, under INDUCTIVE; also FALLACY; HYPOTHESIS.

Induction . . . is sometimes employed to designate the process of investigation and of collecting facts; sometimes, the deducing of an inference from those facts. WHATELY Logic bk. iv, p. 208. [JA. 1836.]

(2) Psychol. The mental procedure in which the mind reacts upon some perception or idea in the form of a guess as to its explanatory principle, or as to the law, or general statement of fact, under which it may be arranged. The repeated testing of this guess with reference to recurring similar cases constitutes a more or less complete induction. Compare REASONING. 3. Any conclusion reached by inductive reasoning; loosely, any generalization or general fact; as, the existence of a luminiferous ether is an induction.

Perhaps the widest and most familiar induction of Biology, is that organisms grow. SPENCER Biology vol. i, p. 107. [A. 1891.]

4. Math. The process of proving a theorem to be generally true by showing (1) that it is true for all values of the unknown quantity between 0 and 1, or, in the case of integers, for 1 simply; (2) that if true for n it is true for $n + 1$. Compare FERMATIAN. 5. Eng. Eccl. Law. The formal installation of a person into an office or church living. 6. An introduction; especially, a preamble, prolog, or prelude foreshowing the argument or character of a literary work.

Therefore, without much induction of superfluous words, I attach you, Sir Walter Woodvil, of high treason, in the King's name. LAMB John Woodvil act iv, sc. 2.

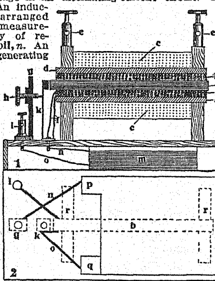
7. Physics. The production of magnetization or electrification in a body by the mere proximity of magnetized or electrified bodies, or of an electric current in a conductor by the variation of the magnetic field in its vicinity.

Induction may be of various kinds: (1) Electromagnetic, the interaction of electromagnetic lines of force upon one another with the consequent production of electric currents. Such electromagnetic lines of force may be set up by a permanent magnet, by an electromagnet, or by a conductor carrying a current, and their variations with reference to the body or conductor in which the induction is set up may be caused (a) by fluctuations in current strength or magnetism, (b) by motion of the conductor or magnet, or (c) by motion of the body in which the current is induced. If the field of force is due to a current, any increase in its strength, or an approach to the conductor, induces an opposite current; a decrease or the recession of the conductor, a current in the same direction. (2) Magnetic, the magnetization of iron, steel, or any other paramagnetic substance by its introduction into a magnetic field. On account of its permeability or its power to multiply lines of force, a paramagnetic body, when placed in a magnetic field, always concentrates such lines of force within itself, and thus temporarily becomes a magnet, or is said to be polarized. In the case of soft iron this magnetization is only temporary and gradually disappears after its removal from the magnetic field, while in the case of steel it is retained as a permanent property. (3) Electrostatic, the production in an insulated conductor, by an electrostatically charged body, of a redistribution of electricity. Such a conductor, brought into the neighborhood of a body containing an electrostatic charge, assumes an unlike charge in the parts nearest to the charging body and a like charge in the parts farthest removed from such body. The charge on the nearer side is bound while that on the further side is free. If the second body be connected with a ground, as by touching it with the finger, the free charge will pass off, leaving only the bound charge, which, on removal of the charging body, will spread all over the surface of the charged body, thus electrifying it oppositely to the other.

If a conductor is twisted into the shape of a helix, its separate turns react upon one another, when a current is passed through them, in a manner analogous to the induction set up in one conductor by another, producing a lag in the increase or decrease of the current. See SELF-INDUCTION. The production of electromotive force in a conductor by motion in a field of magnetic force is frequently termed electrodynamic induction. It may be produced in four ways: (1) by self-induction, or the inductance of a conductor on itself; (2) by mutual induction, the action of a current on a neighboring conductor; (3) by electromagnetic induction, the moving of a conductor in a magnetic field; and (4) by magnetoelectric induction, the moving of a field across a conductor.



8. Admission, as of motive fluid, into the working cylinder of an engine. 9†. A beginning or introduction to anything; that which leads to or induces a thing.

Familiarity takes away fear, when matters not usual prove inductions to terror. OWEN FELLTHAM Resolves, Of Preparing Against Death p. 44. [H. & B. 1832.]

Syn.: deduction, inference. Deduction is reasoning from the general to the particular; induction is reasoning from the particular to the general. Deduction proceeds from a general principle through an admitted instance to a conclusion. Induction proceeds from a number of collated instances, through some attribute common to them all, to a general principle. The accuracy of an induction may be proved by using its conclusion as the premise of a new deduction. Thus what is ordinarily known as scientific induction is a constant interchange of induction and deduction. In deduction, if the general rule is true, and the special case falls under the rule, the conclusion is certain; induction can ordinarily give no more than a probable conclusion, because we can never be sure that we have collated all instances. An induction is of the nature of an inference, but while an inference may be partial and hasty, an induction is careful, and aims to be complete. See INFERENCE. Compare HYPOTHESIS.

— bipolar induction, induction in which the current is reversed in the conductor every half-revolution.— chemical i., the phenomenon observed in physics and photographic chemistry in connection with the action of light on certain sensitive substances, such action being extremely slow in the beginning, but attaining the maximum degree after a certain period has elapsed, as exemplified in photographic plates and papers, as also in a mixture of chlorin and hydrogen.— coefficient of i., that by which the time rate of change of current must be multiplied to give the self- or mutual-induced electromotive force. If the current and induced electromotive force be in a single circuit the coefficient is one of self-induction; if in two related circuits it is one of mutual induction.— cross'-in-duc"tion, n. The production of magnetic lines of force in the core of a dynamo armature by the passing round it of an electric current. This effect added to the normal magnetizing effect of the field produces a distortion of the field between the poles.— dynamic i., the production of electromotive force in a conductor by moving it in relation to the flux of a magnetic field: discovered by Faraday, and the basic principal of operation of nearly all commercial electrical machinery.— horizontal i., the induction caused by the horizontal parts of the structure of an iron ship, such as the deck-beams, upon the needle of the compass, due primarily to the polarization of such beams by the earth's magnetic induction. The induction caused by the vertical parts of an iron ship's structure, due to the same cause, is known as vertical i.— in-duc'tion-bal"ance, n. An apparatus for measuring changes of conductivity, detecting the proximity of metallic bodies, etc., by noting extremely minute changes in an electric current. In one form a telephone is caused to emit a sound whenever the effect of the current is not balanced by that of another nearly equal current.— i.-booster, n. A form of induction-generator which raises the voltage in an alternating-current circuit.— i.-bridge, n. An induction-balance arranged for making measurements usually of resistance.— i.-coil, n. An apparatus for generating currents by electromagnetic induction: consisting usually of two concentric cylindric coils of insulated wire enclosing an iron core. One of the coils is called the primary and the other the secondary. Ordinarily, the primary is short and of thick wire, and the secondary long and of thin wire. An alternating current of high tension is induced in the secondary coil by rapid automatic making and breaking of the circuit in the primary.

Induction-coil.

1. Sectional view. 2. Plan view: a, iron core; bb, primary coil (heavy wire); cc, secondary coil (fine wire); d, insulated tube separating coils; ee, binding-posts connected to terminals of secondary; ff, terminals of primary; g, contact screw standard; h, contact screw; k, vibrating contact spring; l, binding-post; m, condenser; n, o, condenser connections; p, q, two sheets of the condenser; rr, heads of primary coil.

— i.-current, n. Oceanog. A current caused in a sheet of water by the action of another current, and in the opposite direction to the main current.— i.-furnace, n. Same as ELECTRIC FURNACE.— i.-generator, n. An alternating-current generator constructed on the principle of the induction-motor.— i.-machine, n. A machine for generating electricity, particularly static electricity, by induction.— i.-meter, n. A meter constructed on the principle of the induction-motor.— i.-motor, n. A motor of the alternating-current type, in which the current is induced in the armature by the rotation of the field-magnets about it.— i.-pipe, -port, or -valve, n. The pipe, port, or valve through which the live steam or other motive fluid passes to the cylinder of an engine.— i.-regulator, n. A device for regulating voltage or electric pressure. It consists of two coils or more which can be so adjusted as to alter their inductive relation and consequently their voltage.— i.-top, n. A metal top which inclines under self-induced currents while revolving around a vertical axis in a magnetic field.— isogenetic i. (Bot.), simple stimulation, as contradistinguished from complex stimulation.— magnetic i., the magnetizing of a body by bringing it into a magnetic field.— mutual i., the interreaction of two electric circuits upon each other.— open-circuit i., the production of inductive effects in open circuits by means of oscillatory discharges. oscillatory i.‡.— photochemical i., see CHEMICAL INDUCTION.— total magnetic i., the total magnetic flux within any space. — tube of i., an imaginary tube whose enclosing surface is the locus of certain lines of induction of an electric or a magnetic field.— unipolar i., induction in a conductor so moved through a magnetic field as to cut its force-lines continuously, producing a continuous current: a misnomer. — vertical i., see under HORIZONTAL INDUCTION.— in-duc'tion-al, a.— in-duc'tion-ist, n. An adherent of the inductive method of investigation.

in-duc'tivˢ, } Pertaining to or proceeding by induction; as, inductive reasoning: distinguished from dogmatic and opposed to deductive.

An inductive hypothesis is said to be demonstrated when the facts are shown to be in entire accordance with it. HUXLEY Am. Addresses, Evolution lect. iii, p. 90. [A. 1877.]

2. Elec. Of or pertaining to induction; produced or operating by or susceptible of induction; as, inductive force; an inductive machine. 3. Of the character of a prelude or introduction, as to a play; introductory. 4. [Rare.] Inducing or tending to; leading to. [< LL. inductivus, < L. induco (pp. inductus); see INDUCE.]

— inductive embarrassment, inductive retardation. See RETARDATION.— i. method (Logic), the scientific method that proceeds by induction. It requires (1) exact observation; (2) correct interpretation of the observed facts with a view to understanding them in relation to each other and to their causes; (3) rational explanation of the facts by referring them to their real cause or law; and (4) scientific construction, putting the facts in such coordination that the system reached shall agree with the reality. The search for the cause of anything may proceed according to any one of four methods, which have been called the canons of the inductive method. While these canons were satisfactory to the older formal logic, they are almost indefinitely modified in the practise of the experimental methods by modern science. They are: (1) the method of agreement, in which a condition uniformly present is assumed to be probably a cause; (2) the method of difference, in which the happening of an event when a condition is present, and its failure when the condition is absent, lead to the assumption of that condition as a cause; (3) the method of concomitant variations, in which the simultaneous variation in similar degree of condition and event establishes a causal relation; and (4) the method of residues or of residual variations, where after subtracting from a phenomenon the part due to causes already established the remainder is held to be due to some other unascertained cause or to the known remaining causes. For instance, astronomers, observing that a planet is always drawn slightly out of its orbit when passing another planet, conclude by method (1) that the attraction of that other planet is the cause of the variation. This conclusion is strengthened by (2) when it is seen that no perturbation occurs except in proximity to another planet, and by (3) when it is observed that the disturbance is greater or less according to the greater or less distance of the bodies. Finally, when, as in the case of the planet Uranus, the effect of all known bodies is insufficient to explain its perturbations, by (4) the remaining disturbance is attributed to an unknown cause of like nature — in this instance leading to the discovery of the new planet Neptune.— i. sciences, those sciences which deal with facts.— i. verification, the inductive method in its application to the investigation and verification of principles.

in-duc'tiv(e-lyˢ, 1 in-duk'tɪv-lɪ; 2 ĭn-dŭc'tiv-ly, adv. 1. In an inductive manner; by inference. 2. By electric induction.

in"duc-tiv'i-ty, 1 in"duk-tiv'ɪ-tɪ; 2 ĭn"dŭc-tĭv'i-ty, n. Elec. Specific capacity for magnetic induction.

in-duc'to-, 1 in-duk'to-; 2 ĭn-dŭc'to-. From INDUCTION: a combining form in names of physical apparatus having to do with electric or magnetic induction. — in"duc-tom'e-ter, n. An instrument for measuring electric induction or inductivity.— differential inductometer, a device for measuring the current passing through a cable.— in-duc'to-phone, n. Elec. A device for communicating telephonically between trains in motion and fixed stations by alternating induction-currents developed in a coil of wire on a moving train by intermittent currents in stationary conductors parallel with the track. The spiral on the train is in a telephone-circuit.

in-duc'tor, 1 in-duk'tər or -tōr; 2 ĭn-dŭc'tor, n. 1. One who inducts another into office; an introducer or initiator. 2. Elec. Any part of an electrical apparatus which acts inductively upon another; sometimes, a part that is so acted upon; as, an earth-inductor. See EARTH. [< L. inductor, instigator, < induco (pp. inductus); see INDUCE.]— in-duc'tor-al"ter-na"tor, n. Elec. An alternator whose rotating member carries with it neither the field nor armature circuits, but consists merely of iron.

in-duc'to-ry, 1 in-duk'to-rɪ; 2 ĭn-dŭc'to-ry, a. Introductory.

in-duc'to-scope, 1 in-duk'to-skōp; 2 ĭn-dŭc'to-scōp, n. An instrument for detecting magnetic or electric induction.

in-duc'to-script, 1 in-duk'to-skript; 2 ĭn-dŭc'to-script, n. A figure induced upon a photographic plate by an electric discharge from the object.

in-duc'tric, 1 in-duk'trɪk; 2 ĭn-dŭc'tric, a. Elec. Of or pertaining to induction; acting by induction, or when in a state of induction; inductive. [< INDUCTION + ELECTRIC.] in-duc'tri-cal‡.

in-due'¹, 1 in-diū'; 2 ĭn-dū', vt. [IN-DUED'; IN-DU'ING.] 1. To make the possessor of; endow. See ENDUE¹. [In this use a corruption of ENDUE¹, and as such totally distinct from INDUE², tho often confused with it, even by good writers, as by Shakespeare (e. g., Two Gentlemen of Verona act v, sc. 4, l. 153) and others.]

Little children played and ran, and fell like balls indued with will. E. LYNN LINTON Through the Long Nights ch. 15, p. 156. [H. 1888.]

in-due'², vt. & vi. [IN-DUED'; IN-DU'ING.] To put on or upon, as a garment. [< L. induo, < indu, in, < in, in.]

The difficulty of induing boots as hard as a thorough wetting and as thorough a drying could make them. MACDONALD Robert Falconer p. 11. [LOR.]

in-due'ment, 1 in-diū'ment or -mənt; 2 ĭn-dū'ment, n. Endowment.

in-dulge', 1 in-dulj'; 2 ĭn-dŭlġ', v. [IN-DULGED'; IN-DULG'ING.] I. t. 1. To yield, usually unduly or unwisely, to the wishes or inclinations of; neglect to restrain; humor; as, to indulge a child. 2. To give up to or make no effort against; forbear from controlling; as, to indulge a desire for strong drink.

Imaginary evils soon become real ones by indulging our reflections on them. SWIFT Works, Thoughts p. 519. [W. P. N. 1871.]

3. Eccl. To grant a dispensation or indulgence. 4. Com. To grant an indulgence on a bill; to allow time for a bill to be met. 5†. To bestow as a privilege.
II. i. 1. To yield to the gratification of a desire or propensity without constraint: with in.

It is natural to man to indulge in the illusions of hope. HENRY in M. C. Tyler's Patrick Henry p. 124. [H. M. & CO. 1887.]

2†. To yield: with to. [< L. indulgeo, < in, in, + -dulgeo; cp. dulcis, sweet.]

Syn.: content, favor, gratify, humor, pamper, please, satisfy, spoil. See PAMPER.— Ant.: check, contradict, control, deny, disappoint, discipline, displease, oppose, refuse, thwart.
— in-dulge'a-bl(eᴾ, a.— in-dulge'ment, n.— in-dulg'er, n.

in-dul'gence, 1 in-dul'jens; 2 ĭn-dŭl'ġĕnç, vt. [-GENCED; -GENC-ING.] To grant an indulgence to.

in-dul'gence, n. 1. The act of indulging; the yielding to inclination, passion, desire, or propensity in oneself or another; hence, excess; also, the character or habit of being indulgent; when used absolutely, always in a bad sense; as, unbridled indulgence. 2. That with which a person is indulged or indulges himself; an act of compliance, grace, or favor.

God on our youth bestows but little ease,
But on our age most sweet indulgences.
HERRICK Youth and Age l. 2.

3. Com. Permission to defer payment, as of a note. 4. R. C. Ch. (1) Remission, by the power intrusted, of the temporal or temporary punishment still due to sin after sacramental absolution, either in this world or in purgatory. It is conditioned on repentance and reparation. Such remission is based upon the application to the case of each sinner of the infinite fund of spiritual treasure by the church in the merits, i. e., sufferings and sacrifices, of Christ, the saints, and all the redeemed. Indulgences are classed as general, partial, particular, plenary, etc.

Divisions of Indulgences.—Plenary remit all, partial a portion, of the temporal punishment due to sin.

(2) A relaxation, in a person's favor, of a particular rule of ecclesiastical law: properly called dispensation.
5. The granting of liberties by the Declaration of Indulgence. [< L. indulgentia, < indulgen(t-)s; see INDULGENT.] in-dulge'ment; in-dul'gen-cy. — Declaration of Indulgence, in English history, a royal proclamation granting a measure of religious freedom. The chief ones were issued by Charles II. in 1672, suspending the penal laws against "whatsoever dissenters or nonconformists," and giving liberty of public worship save to Roman Catholics, and by James II. in 1687–1688, in favor of Roman Catholics and other dissidents, who, however, mostly refused to profit by it.— Sabbatine (sa. or sab'a-tin) indulgence, claimed for the brown or Carmelite scapular, by which the soul is released from purgatory on the first Saturday after death. The bull on which it is granted, and which is called bull of John XXII., under which it is granted, is a forgery. — sale of indulgences, a charge made against Johann Tetzel, a German Dominican friar, in the sixteenth century. This charge formed the basis of Martin Luther's agitation, when on Oct. 31, 1517, he nailed his ninety-five theses on the Castle Church at Wittenberg.

In-dul'gent, 1 in-dul'jent; 2 in-dŭl'gĕnt, a. Prone to indulge; yielding to the desires or humor of oneself or of those under one's care; forbearing in treatment; failing to exercise proper restraint or control; indulgential. [< L. indulgen(t-)s, ppr. of indulgeo; see INDULGE.] Syn.: see CHARITABLE. — in-dul'gent-ly, adv. in-dul'ging-ly‡.

in'dul-gen'tial, 1 in'dul-jen'shal; 2 in'dŭl-gĕn'shal, a. Pertaining to ecclesiastical indulgences; indulgential. — in'dul-gen'tial-ly, adv.

in'du-lin,] 1 in'du-lin, -lin or -lin; 2 in'dū-lĭn, -lĭn or -lin, n. in'du-line,] Any one of a group of extensively occurring substances prepared by heating aminoazo bodies with monamins in the presence of a mineral acid. They are classified as benzo-indulins ($C_{18}H_{14}N_4$) and naphth-indulins ($C_{22}H_{16}N_4$). The first two groups yield violet to blue colored dyes, as violanilin, Coupier blue, Ellvoff blue, etc.; the latter two have an intense red color. [< INDIGO.]

The indulines are amongst the largest known aniline dyestuffs (Caro & Dale, 1885: Green & Martin, 1896). Their constitution has been made more evident by a series of investigations prosecuted in recent years by Fischer and Hepp, Kehrmann, Nietzki, etc.
SIGMUND RICHTER Organic Chemistry vol. ii. p. 603.

In-dul'phus, 1 in-dul'fus; 2 in-dŭl'fŭs, n. A legendary king of Alban.

in-dult', 1 in-dult'; 2 in-dŭlt', n. 1. R. C. Ch. An indulgence or privilege granted by the Pope, to bishops and others, as exemption from some canonical or ecclesiastical duty. 2. In Spain, an import duty, as that formerly paid on all Arabian products imported. 3†. An indulgence. [< L. indultum, < L. indultus, pp. of indulgeo; see INDULGE.] in-dul'to‡.

in'du-ment, 1 in'dū-ment or -ment; 2 in'dū-ment, n. 1. An integument. 2†. A garment.

in"du-men'tum, 1 in'dū-men'tum; 2 in'dū-mĕn'tŭm, n. 1. Bot. A hairy covering. 2. Ornith. Plumage. [L., garment, < induo; see INDUE.]

in-du'na, 1 in-dū'na; 2 in-dų'na, n. [Zulu-Kafir.] An army leader, a general of an impi or army; a notable: aristocrat.

They call the boabab the indunas' tree; for here the indunas are wont to sit and drink over anything particular is on hand.
F. OATES Matabele Land p. 83 [PAULY 1889.]

in-dun'geon, n. To imprison in a dungeon.

In-du'no, 1 in-dū'no; 2 in-dų'no, n. Giovanni (1815–1878). An Italian historical and genre painter.

in-du'pli-cate, 1 in-dū'pli-kĭt; 2 in-dū'plĭ-cat, a. Bot. Having the edges turned or folded inward: said of calyx or corolla in estivation, or of leaves in vernation.— in-du'pli-ca'tion, n. The condition of being induplicate, or that which is induplicate.— in-du'pli-ca-tive. INDUPLICATE.

in du'plo, 1 dū'plo; 2 dų'plo. Old Eng. Law. In double.— damna in duplo, double damages.

in-dur'ance†, n. Endurance.

in"du-ras'cent‡, a. Bot. Hardening by degrees.

in'du-rate, 1 in'dū-rēt; 2 in'dū-rāt, v. [-RAT'ED; -RAT'-ING.] I. t. 1. To make hard; as, heat indurates clay. 2. Hence, to harden in feeling or character; rid of sensibility.

II. i. 1. To grow or become hard or tough; to harden. 2†. To become fixed, as by custom. [< L. induratus, pp. of indurō, < in, in, + dūrus, hard.] — in'du-ra'ter, n. Hard or hardened.— in"du-ra'tion, n. 1. The act or process of indurating, or the state of being indurated 2. Hardening of the heart; obduracy. 3. An indurated part.— primary, or primitive, induration, the initial sore or chancre which appears in the primary stage of syphilis.— in'du-ra-tiv(e)‡, a. Producing or tending to produce induration.

in'du-rite, 1 in'dū-rait; 2 in'dū-rīt, n. A smokeless powder manufactured by treatment of gunootton with nitrobenzene and steam or hot water: used to solidify and indurate it: invented by Charles E. Munroe. [< INDURATE.]

In dus, 1 in'dus; 2 in'dŭs, n. 1. A river in W. Tibet and N. W. India; length, 1,800 m. to the sea; navigable 600 m. 2. One of the southern constellations situated between Grus and Pavo. In-dus'(s)al, 1 in-dus'al; 2 in-dŭs'al, a. Of or pertaining to an industrium; containing or characterized by industs.— Indusial limestone (Geol.), a Miocene limestone largely composed of larval cases of caddis-flies: occurring in Auvergne, France.

In-du'si-um, 1 in-dū'shi-um; 2 in-dų'shi-ŭm (XIII), n. [-SI-A, pl.] 1. Bot. (1) An outgrowth of a frond covering or surrounding a sorus or fruit-cluster. (2) An appendage hanging from the apex of the stipe beneath the pileus in fungi of the genus Phallus. (3) A hairy cup surrounding a stigma in a flower, as in the goodenial family (Goodenia'ceæ). (4) Same as VELUM, 3 (2). 2. Anat. (1) The amnion. (2) A layer of gray substance on the upper surface of the corpus callosum of the brain. 3. Entom. The larval case of an insect. 4. Rom. Antiq. One of the two tunics usually worn by both men and women, probably the outer one. See TUNIC. [L., tunic, or indue; see INDUE.]

— in-du'si-ate, a. Bot. Provided with an indusium. in-du'si-at'ed‡. in-du'si-form, a. Bot. Shaped like an indusium.— in-du'si-old, a. Bearing a resemblance to an indusium.

Examples of the Indusia of Ferns.
1. Dryopteris. 2. Asplenium. 3. Dicksonia. 4. Cystopteris.

in-dus'tri-al,] 1 in-dus'tri-al; 2 in-dŭs'trĭ-al, a. Of or pertaining to industry or labor; denoting the processes or products of manufacture or commercial production in general; as, the industrial arts; the industrial classes.

The United States of America furnish the only example in the world's history of a community purely industrial in origin and development. CARNEGIE Triumphant Democ p. 265. [s. 1888.]

Industrial, as a forensic technicality, existed long before the word came into use in its present acceptation.

— industrial accidents, in law, those injuries which is added to a material object through the human art or labor expended upon it.— colony (Econ.), a colony maintained at public expense, or otherwise, in useful industries those likely to become a public charge, as well as to help the unemployed to gain a livelihood.— i. exhibition, a fair for the exhibition of industrial products or processes.— i. school, an institute for teaching industrials generally; also, a school for the care and training or reformation of neglected children.— in-dus'tri-al-ly, adv.

in-dus'tri-al-ism, n. 1. A person engaged in industry. Specif., one employed in industrial manufacture as distinguished from agricultural or mercantile pursuits. 2. A stock or security based upon the incorporation or capitalization of an establishment for manufacture or business, or the incorporated company or enterprise itself: commonly used by brokers in the plural, as industrials, meaning securities connected with manufacturing in-in-dus'tri-al-ism, n. 1. The modern industrial system, especially with reference to manufacturing, the organization of industries.

The barbarians of industrialism, grasping chiefs and munitous men, give no ear to priest or pontiff. J. MORLEY Crit. Misc., Speech in Commons p. 17. [s. 1877.]

2. A condition of society in which the highest aim is success in peaceful industries: opposed to militancy. 3. Employment in industry.— in-dus'tri-al-ist, a. Relating to industrialism; characterized by industry.— in-dus'tri-al-ist, n. One engaged in or connected with some industry; a manufacturer or worker.— in-dus'tri-al-ize, vt. [-IZED; -IZ'ING.] To render industrial; to furnish with or devote to industrialism; as, to industrialize a village.

in-dus'tri-ous, 1 in-dus'tri-us; 2 in-dŭs'trĭ-ŭs, a. 1. Exhibiting assiduity in the pursuit of any occupation; resulting from habit developed in business; laborious; as, an industrious workman; an industrious man of letters. 2. Indicating or showing assiduity or diligence; as, an industrious career.

Industrious bees in each bosom reign,
GOLDSMITH The Traveller l. 299.

3. [Rare.] Pertaining or relating to industry; industrial. 4†. Expert; shrewd. [< L. industriosus, < industria; see INDUSTRY.] Syn.: see ACTIVE; BUSY.— in-dus'tri-ous-ly, adv.— in-dus'tri-ous-ness, n.

in-dus-try,] 1 in'dus-tri; 2 in'dŭs-trĭ, [PRIES, 1 -trĭz; 2 -trĭs, pl.] 1. The quality or habit of attention or devotion to any useful or productive pursuit, work, or task, manual or mental; earnest, steady, or constant application to business; as, industry in study.

If you have great talents industry will improve them; if you have but moderate abilities industry will supply their deficiency.
J. REYNOLDS Discourses on Art discourse ii, p. 77. [MCC. & CO. 1891.]

in-du'tiv(e)‡, a. [Rare.] Bot. Covered with the usual integuments: said of seeds. [< L. indue (pp. indutus); see INDUE.]

in-du'vi-æ, 1 in-dū'vi-ē; 2 in-dų'vi-ē, n. pl. Bot. Persistent portions of a perianth, or the remains of non-articulated leaves on a stem. [L., clothes, < indue; see INDUE.] — in-du'vi-al, a.— in-du'vi-ate, a. Bot. Clothed with or having induviæ.

in-d'well',] 1 in'dwel'; 2 in'dwĕl', n. & vi. To dwell in; abide within; inhabit; specially, to dwell permanently in the soul.— in'dwell'er, n. [Poet.] An inhabitant.— in'dwell'ing, a. Dwelling or abiding within; as, an indwelling grace.— in'dwell'ing, n.

In'dy', 1 dan'dī', 2 dăn'dy', Paul Marie Théodore Vincent (°s/1851–). A French composer; inspector of musical instruction in Paris.

i'ne, 1 ī'nē; 2 ī'nĕ, n. A warlike king of the West Saxons (—726); founder an Anglo-Saxon school in Rome.

-ine, suffix. 1. Same as -IN¹. 2. Forming the ending of some feminine names and titles, as Pauline, Lucrine, Josephine, landgravine. [= -IN².] 3. Chem. Used with chemical compounds. See -IN². 4. Org. Chem. Used to indicate hydrocarbons of the acetylene series, as, hexine, heptine, etc. [= -IN².] 5. A termination, sometimes used to form the names of minerals; superseded, in names of species, by -ite; as, chalcosine, chalcocite. [= -IN².]

in'ber-ry, 1 in'ber-ri; 2 in-bĕr'rĭ-cy, n. The state of being or the habit of becoming inebriated.

in'e-bri-ant, 1 in-ī'bri-ant; 2 in-ē'bri-ant. I. a. Intoxicating. II. n. Anything that intoxicates. [< L. inebriant(-)s, ppr. of inebrio, make drunk; < in, in, + ebrius, drunk.]

in-e'bri-ate, 1 in-ī'bri-ēt; 2 in-ē'bri-āt. a. [-AT'ED; -AT'-ING.] I. t. 1. To make drunk; intoxicate.

The cups, That cheer but not inebriate.
COWPER Task bk. iv, l. 40.

2. Also, figuratively, to exhilarate; excite; stupefy.

Oh! that THEE would'st enter into my heart, and inebriate it.
AUGUSTINE Confessions tr. by Shedd, bk. i. p. 4. [W. F. P. 1885.]

3†. To refresh, as with water. [M.]

II. i. 1. To become intoxicated, actually or figuratively. [< L. inebriatus, pp. of inebrio; see INEBRIANT.]

in-e'bri-ate. 1. a. Inebriated, literally or figuratively; drunken. II. n. A drunkard, especially a habitual drunkard. [< L. inebriatus; see INEBRIATE, v.]

— Inebriates' Acts (Eng.), a series of acts (1879–1900) dealing with the confinement of habitual drunkards. They embrace the imprisonment of criminal inebriates as well as the confinement of voluntary applicants, holding that the drunkard is one who does not come under the jurisdiction in lunacy but who is nevertheless dangerous to himself or others.

in-e"bri-a'tion, 1 in-ī'bri-ē'shon; 2 in-ē"bri-ā'shon, n. 1. The act of inebriating, or the state of being inebriated; drunkenness.

His position . . . carried the flag of habitual inebriation on his nose.
GEORGE MEREDITH Diana of the Crossways p. 97. [s. reiss. 1886.]

2. Exhilaration or intoxication of the mind or feelings; excessive excitement, emotion, or exhilaration. [< LL. inebriatio(n-), < L. inebriatus; see INEBRIATE.]

in"e-bri'e-ty, 1 in'i-brai'e-ti; 2 in'ē-brī'ĕ-ty, n. The state or habit of inebriety; drunkenness; especially, habitual intoxication. [< L. in- intens. + ebriet(ā-)s; see INEBRIETY.]— in-e'bri-ism, n. Habitual inebriety. (C.)

in-e'bri-ous, a. [RARE.] Drunk, or causing drunkenness.

in-eche'‡, vt. To insert; add.

in"e-con'o-my, n. Wastefulness; absence of economy.— in-e-cer'no-ne'le, a.

in-e'di-a, 1 in-ī'di-e; 2 in-ē'dĭ-a. n. 1. Starvation. 2. Abstinence. [L., < in-, not, + edo, eat.]

in-ed'i-ble(e), a. Not good for food. [< LL. inedibilis, < in-, not; and see EDIBLE.]— in-ed"i-bil'i-ty, n.

in-ed'it-ed, a. 1. Not published; as, an inedited manuscript. 2. Unedited; for publication.

EDMUND GOSSE in The Forum Jan., 1891, p. 520.

— in-ed'i-ta, n. pl. [L.] Unpublished manuscripts.

in-ed"u-ca-bil'i-a, 1 in-ed'ū-ka-bil'i-a; 2 in-ĕd"ū-cā-bĭl'i-a, n. pl. Mam. A section of placental mammals having the cerebrum small and not covering the olfactory lobes or cerebellum, including edentates, rodents, insectivores, and bats. [< IN-³ + L. educo; see EDUCATE.]

— in-ed"u-ca-bil'i-an, a. & n.

in-ed'u-ca-bil'(e), a. Uneducable.

in-ef, i-nef'‡, 2 in-ĕf', n. [F.] A poison applied to arrows by natives of the Gabun country. See STROPHANTUS.

in-ef'fa-bl(e), 1 in-ef'e-bl; 2 in-ĕf'a-bl, a. 1. That can not be expressed in speech; unspeakable; unutterable; as, the ineffable name of Jehovah. 2. That must not be spoken; as, the ineffable name of Jehovah. 3†. That can not be uttered; unpronounceable. [M.] 4†. Math. Irrational; surd. [M.] [< L. ineffabilis, < in-, not, + effabilis, < effor, speak, < ex-, out, + for, speak.]— in-ef"fa-bil'i-ty, in-ef'fa-bl(e-ness†, n.— in-ef'fa-bly, adv.

in-ef'fa-ble, n. 1. A person not to be named or mentioned; pl., [HUMOROUS] Trousers.

in"ef-fec'tive,] 1 in'e-fek'tiv; 2 in'ĕ-fĕc'tĭv, a. 1. Not in"ef-fec'tive‡,] producing any effect, or not producing the effect expected; not effective; inefficient; abortive.

Many of the better class of men are rendered wholly ineffective to a blind and fruitless effort to produce something which shall be a work of art.
PHILLIPS BROOKS Lect. on Preaching lect. iv, p. 109. [L. P. & CO. 1879.]

2. Not competent to the service or end intended; impotent; as, ineffective force.— in"ef-fec'tiv(e)-ly, adv.— in"ef-fec'tiv(e)-ness, n.

in"ef-fec'tu-al, 1 in"e-fek'chu-el or -tū-el; 2 in"ĕ-fĕc'-chu-al or -tū-al, a. Not able to produce a proper or intended effect; lacking in adequacy; not effectual; inefficient; fruitless; weak; unavailing; as, an ineffectual remedy; an ineffectual effort.— in"ef-fec"tu-al'i-ty, n. Ineffectualness, or that which is ineffectual.— in"ef-fec'tu-al-ly, adv.— in"ef-fec'tu-al-ness, n. The state or quality of being ineffectual.

in-ef'fer-ves'cent, a. Not effervescing, or incapable of effervescing.— in-ef"fer-ves'cence, in-ef"fer-ves'cen-cy, n.— in-ef"fer-ves'ci-bl(e), a. Not effervescible.

in-ef"fi-ca'cious, a. Not producing or not able to produce the effect desired; not efficacious. [< L. inefficax, < in-, not, and efficax; see EFFICACIOUS.]— in-ef"fi-ca'cious-ly, adv.— in-ef"fi-ca-cy, n. The state or quality of being inefficacious. in-ef"fi-ca'cious-ness‡.

in"ef-fi'cien-cy, 1 in"e-fish'un-si; 2 in"ĕ-fish'ĕn-cy, n. 1. Fact or state of being inefficient; want of ability to accomplish a desired object. 2. Mech. The loss in the transforming energy of a machine, numerically represented by unity less the efficiency. See EFFICIENCY, 2 (2).

in"ef-fi'cient, 1 in"e-fish'ent; 2 in"ĕ-fish'ĕnt, a. Not efficient; not possessing power or capacity adequate to a given requirement; not efficacious. [< L. inefficiens, < in-, not, and efficiens; see EFFICIENT.]

As Yorktown . . . the enemy were neither idle nor inefficient in their efforts for defense and annoyance.
J. SPARKS Writings of Washington vol. i. p. 13, p. 367. [s. a. co. 1837.]

in"ef-fi'cient, n. One who is not efficient.

in"ef-ful'gent, a. [Rare.] Lacking in brilliancy.

in"e-las'tic, 1 in"i-las'tik; 2 in"ē-lăs'tĭc, a. Lacking or deficient in elasticity. (1) Not recovering after forcible change of shape. (2) Apparently incapable of change of shape; rigid or incompressible.

There are no bodies known that are perfectly elastic, or perfectly inelastic.
B. SILLIMAN, JR. Physics p. 143. [s. a. co. 1867.]

— in"e-las'ti-cal-ness, n. To deprive of elasticity.— in"e-las-tic'i-ty, n. Want of elasticity.

in-el'e-gance, 1 in-el'i-gans; 2 in-ĕl'ĕ-gans, n. 1. The state of being inelegant, or that which is inelegant; want of refinement or grace. 2. Math. In reverse order, as propositions. in-el'e-gan-cy‡.

in-el'i-gi-bl(e), 1 in-el'ı-jı-bl; 2 ĭn-ĕl'ı-gı-bl, a. 1. Legally or otherwise disqualified for office; not eligible.

The President (of the United States) . . . should . . . by constitutional prohibition, be made ineligible for a second term. DREW Orations, Feb. 22, 1833 p. 45. [cas. co. 1890.]

2. Not suitable to be selected or chosen; inexpedient; undesirable; as, an ineligible location. 3†. Undiscernible; inexpedient. [< L. ineligibilis, < L. in-, not, + eligo: see ELECT, a.] —in-el'i-gi-bil'i-ty, n. —in-el'i-gi-bly(e-ness)†, n. —in-el'i-gi-bly, adv.

in-el'o-quent, a. Not eloquent. —in-el'o-quence, n. —in-el'o-quent-ly, adv.

in"e-mend'a-ble†, a. Not to be atoned for.

in"e-mo-tiv'i-ty, n. A morbid lack of emotional sensibility.

in"e-nar'ra-ble†, a. Unspeakable; indescribable.

in-en'chy-ma, 1 in-ĕŋ'kı-mə; 2 ĭn-ĕŋ'cy-ma, n. Bot. Tissue composed of cells with spiral fibers coiled in their interior. [< Int. + Gr. enchyma, infusion.]

-inene, suffix. Chem. Sometimes used to denote a hydrocarbon of the acetylene series.

in-ept', 1 in-ept'; 2 ĭn-ĕpt', a. 1. Not fit or suitable; unapt. 2. Not consistent with reason or sound sense; absurd. 3. Inappropriate; unbecoming. 4. Law. Void; without effect. Compare INAPT. [< L. ineptus, < in-, not, + aptus: see APT.] —in-ept'i-tude, n. The quality of being inept; unfitness; inaptitude; foolishness.

This gentleman, afterwards Charles X., stands as perhaps the most shining example of the ineptitude of royal houses. T. ROOSEVELT Gouverneur Morris ch. 8, p. 217. [IB. M. & CO. 1888.]

in-ept'ae, 1 in-ep'tı-ı; 2 ĭn-ĕp'tı-ı, pl. Ornith. A group of birds, variously ranked and limited, typified by the dodo. [< L. ineptus: see INEPT.]

in-e'qual, 1 in-ī'kwəl; 2 ĭn-ē'kwal, a. 1. Enlom. Uneven: said of a surface. 2†. Unequal; unjust. [OF., < L. inæqualis, < in-, not, + æqualis; see EQUAL.]

in"e-qual'i-ty, 1 in"ı-kwol'ı-tı; 2 ĭn"ē-kwal'ı-ty, n. [-TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tiz, pl.] 1. Want of equality in things of the same kind; difference, either absolute or inherent, forming or constituting variance or disparity; diversity; as, inequality of persons in respect to age, stature, temperament, social consideration, etc., and of things in respect to size, weight, number, etc.

As long as there are inequalities in human character they will show themselves in human condition.

H. WARNER in Forum, Monthly Jan., 1888, p. 274.

2. Lack of evenness or proportion; variation, as from that which is regular or proportioned; want of uniformity; disproportion; variableness; as, the inequalities in any surface; inequalities of style. 3. Want of effectiveness; inadequacy; incompetency. 4. Injustice. 5. Astron. A deviation from uniformity or constancy in the motion of a heavenly body. 6. Physiography. The daily variation in rise of the tide, due to varying lunar influences. 7. Alg. A statement that two quantities are not equal, made by placing the sign < or > between them, the angle being toward the symbol of smaller quantity. [< L. inæqualitas, < inæqualis; see INEQUAL.] SYN.: see DIFFERENCE.—inequalities in altitude (Surv.), errors caused by the effect of changes of temperature upon the metal of the sextant.—lunar inequality. Astron. 1. A variation of the moon's motion in a true elliptic orbit due to the disturbing attraction of the sun and the planets. 2. A very small fluctuation of the magnetic needle due to the moon.—parallactic i. (Astron.), an irregularity in the moon's motion depending upon the angle between the sun and the moon, by means of which the solar parallax can be determined. Compare LIBRATION.—periodic i. (Astron.), the comparatively short recurring disturbances from an elliptic orbit caused by the action of another attracting body; as, the periodic i. of Saturn. [RARE.] One who does not believe in equality in social or political life.

in"e-qua'tion, n. Alg. An inequality.

in-e'qui-, 1 in-ī'kwı-; 2 ĭn-ē'qui-, From French in, not, + EQUI-: a combining form.—in-e"qui-ac'ti-nate, a. Having unequal rays, as a sponge-spicule.—in-e"qui-ax'i-al, a. Having unequal axes.

Other words beginning with this prefix will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.

in-e"qui-lat'er-al, 1 in-ī'kwı-lat'ər-əl; 2 ĭn-ē'kwi-lăt'ər-al, a. Not equilateral; unequal-sided; specif., in conchology, having the anterior and posterior sides of the valve unequal, as the oyster; in foraminifers, obliquely coiled.—in"e-qui-lat'er-al'i-ty, n.

in-e"qui-lib'ri-ty, n. Lack of equilibrium. —in-e"qui-lo'bate, a. Not having the lobes equal. —in-e"qui-pot'ent-ial, a. Acted on by unequal forces; unstable. —in-e"qui-ten'ti-al'i-ty, n.

in-e'qui-te'ne, 1 in-ī'kwı-tī'nı; 2 ĭn-ē'kwi-tē'ĭn, n. pl. Arach. A division of spiders, nearly related, having convergent spinnerets, eyes in two cross-rows, and slender legs, and spinning irregular webs, as Theridiidæ. [< L. inæquus, unequal (< in-, not, + æquus, equal), + tela, web.] —in-e"qui-te'nan, a. & n.

in-eq'ui-ty, 1 in-ĕk'wı-tı; 2 ĭn-ĕk'wi-ty, n. [-TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tiz, pl.] Want of equity; injustice; also, an unfair act.

in-e'qui-valve, 1 in-ī'kwı-valv; 2 ĭn-ē'kwi-valv, a. Conch. Having the valves of unequal size, whether lateral, as in a scallop, oyster, or other bivalve, or dorsal and ventral, as in brachiopods. In-e'qui-valved; in-e'qui-val'vu-lar, in-e'qui-val've-ous, 1 in-ī'kwı-val'vı-ələr, -vı-əs; 2 ĭn-ē'kwi-val'vu-lar, -ve-us, adj. —in-e'qui-val'vu-lar, n.

in"er-get'ic, 1 in"ər-jĕt'ık; 2 ĭn"er-gĕt'ic, a. [RARE.] Without energy; inert. in"er-ge-tist, —in"er-ge'ti-cal-ly, adv.

TUPPER Proverbial Philos., Of Immortality I. 130.

In-er'mes, 1 in-ĕr'mīz; 2 ĭn-ĕr'mes, n. pl. Helminth. The restricted genus-group of the section of cestoids of larger group. [L., pl. of inermis; see INERMOUS.] In-er'mi.

in-er'mi-a, 1 in-ĕr'mı-ə; 2 ĭn-ĕr'mi-a, n. pl. Spong. A tribe of dictyonine siliceous sponges without uncinate spicules. [L., neut. pl. of inermis; see INERMOUS.] —in-er'mi-an, a.

in-er'mous, 1 in-ĕr'mus; 2 ĭn-ĕr'mus, a. Bot. Unarmed; without prickles, as a leaf or twig. [< L. inermis, < in-, not, + arma, arms.] in-erm'i-ty, in-er'mist.

in-er'ra-bl(e)†, 1 in-ĕr'ə-bl; 2 ĭn-ĕr'a-bl, a. Incapable of committing an error; infallible; unerring. [< LL. inerrabilis, < L. in-, not, + errō, wander.] —in-er'ra-bil'i-ty, n. The quality of being exempt from error; infallibility.

If we are to believe in the inerrability of a person or a body of persons. W. E. GLADSTONE Gleanings of Past Years vol. iii, p. 260. [MACM., 1876.]

in-er'ran-cy, 1 in-ĕr'ən-sı; 2 ĭn-ĕr'an-cy, n. The state or quality of being free from error; freedom from errancy; as applied to Scripture, plenary inspiration.

Some of us can more easily believe in the inerrancy of the Bible than in the inerrancy of its critics.

Christian Advocate [New York] Nov. 29, 1891, p. 5.

in-er'rant, 1 in-ĕr'ənt; 2 ĭn-ĕr'ant, a. Exempt from error; unerring; in theology, free from errancy. See ERRANCY.

in-ert', 1 in-ərt'; 2 ĭn-ert', a. 1. Destitute of inherent power to move or to resist a moving force; inanimate; lifeless. 2. Possessing inertia; as, an inert mass of matter. See INERTIA.

Its frequent movements distinguish a quadruped or a bird from inert things. HERBERT SPENCER, Sociology vol. i, p. 133. [D. 1891.]

2. Slow in motion; indisposed to move or act; inactive; sluggish; dull; as, an inert reptile.

The Honorable Mrs. Jamieson was fat and inert.

Lady CAMPBELL, Country Gentleman p. 52. [B. 1868.]

3. Devoid of active chemical properties; neutral; as, carbon is inert at ordinary temperature. [< L. iner(t-)s, < in-, not, + ar(t-)s, art.] SYN.: see HEAVY; IDLE; LIFELESS; PASSIVE.—in-ert'i-tude, n. [RARE.] A state of or tendency toward inertness.—in-ert'ly, adv.—in-ert'ness, n.

In-er'tes, 1 in-ər'tīz; 2 ĭn-ĕr'tes, n. pl. Ornith. A group of birds with a heavy body and short wings and tail, including the dodo and the kiwi. [< L. iner(t-)s; see INERT.]

in-er'ti-a, 1 in-ər'shı-ə; 2 ĭn-ĕr'shi-a, n. 1. The state of being inert; indisposition to move or act; inertness.

And perhaps we will find less pernicious disorganization in the opposition of bad people than in the inertia of good people.

A. D. WHITE, Recreations of a Country Parson first series, p. 31. [n. & y. 1891.]

2. Physics. That property of matter by virtue of which it persists in its state of rest or of uniform motion in a straight line unless some force changes that state; resistance to change of motion: formerly called vis inertiæ.

Many physicists now regard the conception of a resistance to change of motion as unnecessary, such assumed resistances being simply equivalent to inability to move themselves. Hence the word is less used in exact science than formerly, except when employed quantitatively as a synonym for mass.

To these names the inertia of secretaries and the motion of life begins is, and will be for ever, beyond the limit prescribed to the human intellect. WALKER Holy Spirit p. 18. [a. c. a.]

3. Med. Want of activity; applied to the uterus when its contractions have not been sufficient. [< L. iner(t-)s; see INERT.]—electric or electromagnetic inertia, the resistance caused by self-induction to sudden variations of the current in a conductor.—i. of attention (Psychophys.), the tendency of attention to remain concentrated upon, or to recur to, a given object or topic, in spite of attempted distractions.—i. of light, in psychophysics, that physiological characteristic of the visual apparatus, on account of which any sensation requires appreciable time, after application of the stimulus, to attain its maximum intensity, and to subside to zero after the stimulus is suddenly to acquire or lose magnetism; magnetic lag.—mechanical i., the inertia caused by the mass of a body as contrasted with that caused by the charge with electricity.—reduced i. (Mech.), in any machine, the mass, which if placed at the driving point, would have a kinetic energy equal to that of the machine.—rotational i., same as MOMENT OF INERTIA. See under MOMENT.—terminal i., in psychophysics the quality of the nervous substance which continues the sensory effect for an appreciable time after the stimulus has ceased to be applied.

—in-er'tial, a. Pertaining to or of the nature of inertia.

—in-er'tion, n. [RARE.] Absence of activity; inertia.

in"es-ca'tion, 1 in"ĕs-kā'shən; 2 ĭn"es-ca'tion, n. Her. A shield of pretense, or small shield borne within another: sometimes called escutcheon, if not borne on the fess-point. The charges are those by the husband of an heiress to blazon his claim to his wife's lands.

in"es-ite, 1 in'ĕs-īt; 2 ĭn'es-ĭt, n. Mineral. A fibrous fleshred, triclinic variety of silicate ($H_2(MnCa)_3Si_2O_9$, crystallizing in the triclinic system.

in es'se, 1 in es'ı; 2 ĭn es'e. [L.] In being; actually existing. Compare IN POSSE.

in"es-sen'tial, 1 in"ĕ-sen'shəl; 2 ĭn"ĕ-sĕn'shal, a. 1. Unessential; not essential. 2. [RARE.] Immaterial.

in-es'tive, 1 in-ĕs'ıv; 2 ĭn-ĕs'ĭv, a. Denoting the place of a being resting.

in"es-thet'ic, } 1 in"ĕs-thĕt'ık; 2 ĭn"ĕs-thĕt'ic, a. Trans-in"es-thet'ic, } gressing the laws of esthetics; lacking in beauty, esp. often in the sense of beauty: said of persons.

in-es'ti-ma-bl(e), 1 in-ĕs'tı-mə-bl; 2 ĭn-ĕs'ti-ma-bl, a. That can not be estimated or computed; above prices; loosely, very excellent or valuable; as, inestimable privileges. [F., < L. inæstimabilis, < in-, not; and see ESTIMABLE.] SYN.: see PRECIOUS.—in-es'ti-ma-bil'i-ty, n. in-es'ti-ma-bly, adv.

in"e-unt, 1 in'ı-unt; 2 ĭn'e-ŭnt, n. Math. A point of a curve. [< L. in, within, + eunt-, ppr. of ineo, enter, < in, into, + eo, go.] in-e'unt-point'†.

in-ev'i-ta-bl(e), 1 in-ĕv'ı-tə-bl; 2 ĭn-ĕv'i-ta-bl, a. 1. That can not be shunned, avoided, or prevented; bound to happen; certain; sure. The very nature of things; unavoidable; as, the inevitable conflict. 2. Hence, jocularly, customary; usual; as, the inevitable row with the cabman. [< L. inevitabilis, < in-, not; and see EVITABLE.] SYN.: see NECESSARY.—in-ev'i-ta-bil'i-ty, n. 1. Inevitableness. 2. An inevitable thing.

The inevitabilities are always sapping every seeming prosperity built on the unrighteousness of others. HERBERT Land and Discipline, Sketches, Ethics p. 183. [B. M. & CO. 1889.]

—in-ev'i-ta-bl(e-ness), n. The state or quality of being inevitable. —in-ev'i-ta-bly, adv. Certainly; surely.

If sin did not inevitably carry penalty on its back, men would keep on sinning. H. WOOD in The Arena Jan., 1892, p. 202.

(2) The institution of a quality, usually evil, by influence or communication.

It [the mob] thinks by infection, for the most part, catching an opinion like a fever.

RUSKIN Sesame and Lilies lect. i, p. 46. [w. & s. 1889.]

(3) See TELEGONY. 2. Law. Taint of illegality. 3. That which infects; especially, infectious morbific matter, as miasmas. 4. Philol. Modification by assimilation of a vowel sound in a diphthong by which the first vowel acquires the sound of the second. 5†. [Humorous.] Liking for; affection. [< LL. infectio(n-), < L. infectio; see INFECT.] SYN.: see CONTAGION.

in-fec'tious, 1 in-fek'shus; 2 in-fĕc'shŭs, a. 1. That may be communicated by infection; passing easily from one to another; catching; distinguished from contagious.

The infectious poison of that ale had been rapidly diffused throughout his moral system.

HAWTHORNE Scarlet Letter ch. 20, p. 265. [N. M. & CO. 1889.]

2. Able to communicate infection; contaminating; tainting; as, infectious garments. 3. Law. Tainting with illegality; rendering liable to confiscation or forfeiture. 4. Having the quality of being transmitted from one to another; as, infectious laughter. 5†. Infected.—infectious disease. 1. Any disease due to the entrance into and growth in the body of microscopic organisms. 2. A disease communicable from one person to another by germs carried in the air or water.—in-fec'tious-ly, adv.—in-fec'tious-ness, n.

in-fec'tive, 1 in-fek'tiv; 2 in-fĕc'tiv, a. 1. Tending to in-fec'tīve,) spread or be communicated; infectious. 2†. Injurious.—in-fec'tīv(e-ly, adv.—in-fec'tīv(e-ness², n.

in'fec-tiv-i-ty, 1 in'fek-tiv'i-ti; 2 in'fĕc-tĭv'ĭ-ty, n. Tendency or power to infect; infectiousness.

in'fe-cun'di-ty, 1 in'fi-kun'di-ti; 2 in'fē-cŭn'di-ty, n. Lack of fecundity; barrenness; unfruitfulness. [< L. infecunditā(t-)s, < infecundus, unfruitful, < in-, not, + fecundus, fruitful; see FECUND.]—in'fe-cund, a.—in'fe-cund'ous†, a.

in-fee'ble†, vt. Enfeeble.

in-feff', 1 in-fef'; 2 in-fĕf', vt. [Scot. or Archaic.] Same as infeoff'.—in-feff'ment, n. Same as INFEOFFMENT, n., 2. The act of symbolically giving possession of heritable property.

The digging and construction of such a well in the midst of his acquired settlement went very far to the infeoffment of the property.

J. R. MACGUFF Noontide at Sychar ch. 1, p. 13. [c. & BROS. 1889.]

in-fel'i-cif'ic, 1 in-fel'i-sif'ik; 2 in-fĕl'ĭ-cĭf'ic, a. Ethics, Causing unhappiness or misfortune; characterized by the moral value of an action; as, the infelicific breach of a law. [< L. infelix (see INFELICITY) + facio, make.]

in-fe-lic'i-tous, 1 in'fi-lis'i-tus; 2 in'fĕ-lĭs'ĭ-tŭs, a. Not felicitous or happy. (1) Not happy in its application; lacking in fitness; inappropriate; inept; as, an infelicitous remark. (2) Not felicitous in condition or result; unfortunate; unhappy; as, an infelicitous occasion.—in'fe-lic'i-tous-ly, adv.

in'fe-lic'i-ty, 1 in'fi-lis'i-ti; 2 in'fĕ-lĭs'ĭ-ty, n. [-TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tĭz, pl.] 1. The state or quality of being infelicitous. (1) Lack of good fortune; unhappiness; misery.

There is so much infelicity . . . in the world, that scarce any man has leisure from his own distresses to estimate the comparative happiness of others. BURNEY Evelina ch. 1, p. 5. [L. & L.]

(2) Lack of appropriateness or suitableness; as, the infelicity of an interruption. 2. That which is infelicitous, as a word, act, or thought.

Charms and quotations are the infelicities of the work.

R. SOUTH Sermon vol. ii, ser. ii, p. 86. [E. & R. 1870.]

in'fe-lic'i-tous, same as INFEOFF, etc.

in-fer', 1 in-fûr'; 2 in-fĕr', vt. [IN-FERRED', IN-FER'RING.] 1. To bring forward or advance as a probable, necessary, or contingent consequence of something known or assumed; to derive by any process of reasoning, inductive or deductive; accept on the basis of evidence; conclude. See INFERENCE.

When we infer any particular cause from an effect, we must proportion the one to the other.

HUME Essays, Providence p. 571. [w. L. & CO.]

2. To be or furnish evidence of; show; prove; imply. Arians and Socinians . . . do not deny that, even if Christ did in fact create all things, this fact does not infer his divinity.

DWIGHT Theology vol. i, ser. ii, p. 88. [n. 1846.]

3†. To bring in; advance; adduce; also, to occasion. II. i. To draw or form a conclusion.

In geology it is very necessary in almost all cases not only to observe, but to infer.

in'fer-ence, 1 in'fer-ens; 2 in'fĕr-ĕnc, n. 1. The act or process of inferring. 2. Logic. The derivation of a judgment or conclusion from another judgment known knowledge or thought on the assumed ground of a real interdependence of things conformably to law; illation.

The logical law assumed in inference is embodied in the axioms of identity, contradiction, and excluded middle, and sufficient reason. Inference is of two general kinds: (1) immediate inference or consequence, which derives the conclusion from a single judgment without the intervention of a middle term and embraces derivation (a) by implication and obversion and (b) by addition, disjunction, conversion, and opposition; (2) mediate 1., which connects the conclusion from at least two judgments through a middle term, embracing (a) deduction and (b) induction.

The law of case studies a vast subject, the more cautious in inference he becomes.

BRYCE Am. Commonwealth vol. i, intro., p. 4. [MACM. 1889.]

3. That which is inferred; a proposition perceived to be true because of its connection with some known fact; conclusion; deduction. 4. Loosely, a conclusion on presumptive evidence; conjecture; as, that is a mere inference. [< OF. inference, < LL. infero; see INFER.] SYN.: conclusion, consequence, deduction, demonstration, induction. A conclusion is the absolute and necessary result of the admission of certain premises, an inference is a probable conclusion toward which known facts, statements, or admissions point, but which they do not absolutely establish; sound premises together with their necessary conclusion constitute a demonstration. Compare synonyms for DEMONSTRATION; DRIFT; HYPOTHESIS; INDUCTION; PRESUMPTION.—

ampliative inference, inference that adds to facts premised: opposed to explicative inference — analogical i., the inference that a thing that has certain characteristics belonging to a limited number of other things possesses another that is common to them: a combination of induction and deduction. — complete i., an inference involving no matter of fact that is not implied in the logical hawk at the basis of reasoning. — explicative i., an inference that simply unfolds the facts already contained in the premises. — i. of transposed quantity (Logic), an inference depending for its accuracy, upon the transposition of cases considered. — probable i., inference in which the truth of the conclusion is acknowledged to be only probable. — unconscious i., a species of inference wherein merely a judgment is arrived at without process of deliberate ratiocination, but merely as a habitual act.

in"fer-en'tial, l. in'fer-en'shal; 2 in'fẽr-ẽn'shal, a. Of the nature of an inference; deducible by inference.

in-fe'ri-æ, l. in-fi'ri-ē; 2 in-fẽ'ri-ẽ, n. pl. [L.] Rom. Antiq. Offerings to the manes of the dead.

in-fe'ri-or-ni'a-a, l. in-fe'ri-ȯr-ni'-a; 2 in-fẽ'ri-ôr'ni-a, n. pl. Entom. The insects of the heteropterous family Lygæidæ. [< INFERO- + L. cornu, horn.]

in-fe'ri-or, l. in-fi'ri-er; 2 in-fẽ'ri-ẽr, a. 1. Lower in excellence, value, quality, or rank; of less importance; minor; subordinate; as, an inferior race. 2. Situated in a lower place; subjacent; as, the inferior maxilla.

The inferior valley, below the forest, contains four communities. JOHN ADAMS Defence of the Constitutions, Underwald in vol. i, p. 26. [1ROCK. 1794.]

Specif.: (1) Anat. Situated relatively below similar parts distinguished as superior when the two are compared; as, the inferior sterna of the birds. (2) Zool. Situated on or pertaining to the lower or ventral side. 3. Later in point of time; as, the inferior limit of a year. 4. Mus. Having a lower pitch. 5. Bot. (1) Below some other organ; as, an inferior calyx is one growing from beneath and free from the ovary; an inferior ovary is one with an adherent or superior calyx. (2) In a blossom, anterior. 6. Astron. (1) Between the earth and the sun; as, the orbit of the earth, an inferior planet. (2) Below the horizon; below the celestial pole. 7. Print. Set below the level of the line, as small characters without a shoulder below, used in chemical formulas; as, in CuO_2, 2 is an inferior figure. See SUPERIOR, a., 4. (4). 8. Railroad. Said of a train that must yield the right of way to another; as, a freight-train is inferior to a passenger-train. [L., compar. of inferus, low.] — inferior pharyngeal (Zoöl.), a hypopharyngeal. — in-fe'ri-or-ize, st. — in-fe'ri-or-ly, adv.

in-fe'ri-or, n. One who is or is classed lower than another or others, as in station, qualities, or powers; a subordinate; as, to prefer the society of one's inferiors.

in-fe"ri-or'i-ty, l. in-fi"ri-or'i-ti; 2 in-fẽ"ri-ôr'i-ty, n. 1. The state or quality of being inferior; as, inferiority of mind. 2. Logic. The character of that which can be applied to only part of the cases to which something else is applicable: said of a sign, name, proposition, or inference. [< LL. inferioritia, < L. inferior; see INFERIOR.]

in-fer'nal, l. in-fȯr'nal; 2 in-fẽr'nal, a. 1. Belonging to or coming from hell; akin to or befitting hell or its occupants; hellish; diabolical; often used colloquially to express indignation or emphasis; as, an infernal rascal.

Whose soul endures infernal woes,
Enchained by some infernal spell.
WHITTIER Lines on Peters Predestined st. 6.

2. Pertaining to the Tartarus of the ancients, or the abode of souls after death. [F., < LL. infernalis, < L. infernus, underground, < infera, low.] SYN.: demoniac, demoniacal, devilish, diabolical, fiendish, hellish, satanic. — Ant: see synonyms for ANGELIC; CELESTIAL. — infernal machine, any device for doing unusual damage by explosion, especially one contrived to explode automatically and disguised so as to appear harmless, as for assassination or the destruction of property. — i. stone (Chem.), caustic potash. — in-fer'nal-ly, adv.

in-fer'nal, n. 1. An infernal machine. 2. An inhabitant of hell or Tartarus; hence, one having a fiendish appearance or spirit. 3†. pl. Hell.

in'fer-nal-i-ty, l. in-fẽr'nal-i-ti; 2 in-fẽr-nal'i-ty, n. The quality or character of being infernal; the temper of an infernal being. in-fer'nal-ism†, — in-fer'nal-ry, n. Diabolism.

in-fer'nal-ize, l. in-fȯr'nal-aiz; 2 in-fẽr'nal-īz, vt. [-IZED; -IZING.] To make infernal.

in-fer'no, l. in-fȯr'no; 2 in-fẽr'no, n. [It.] 1. The infernal regions; hell. 2. [L.] The first of the three parts of the Divine Comedy of Dante, describing the poet's journey through Hell, under the guidance of Vergil, and consisting of 34 cantos.

in'fe-ro-, l. in'fi-ro-; 2 in'fe-ro-. From Latin inferus, low, or inferior, lower: a combining form. — in"fe-ro-an-te'ri-or, a. Situated below and in front. — in"fe-ro-bran'chi-a'ta, n. pl. Conch. A division of nudibranchiate gastropods, especially a suborder with the gills beneath the sides of the mantle, as in Pteropleura. — in"fe-ro-bran'chi-al, — in"fe-ro-branch, — in"fe-ro-bran'chi-an, n. — in"fe-ro-bran'chi-ate, a. & n. — in"fe-ro-ex-ter'nal, a. Lower and on the outer side. — in"fe-ro-fron'tal, a. Relating to the lower part of the frontal region. — in"fe-ro-in-ter'nal, a. Lower and on the inner side. — in"fe-ro-lat'er-al, a. — Situated below and to one side. — in"fe-ro-me'di-an, a. Ventrimesial. — in"fe-ro-me'di-an, a. Situated below and toward the median line. — in"fe-ro-pos-te'ri-or, a. Situated below and behind.

in-fer'rable, a. Same as INFERABLE.

in-fer'ring, l. in-fȯr'ing; 2 in-fẽr'ing, n. The process of inference.

One might, therefore, define Pering, the assigning of a reason for argument) for the support of a given proposition; and Inferring, the deduction of a Conclusion from given Premises.
WHATELY Logic, Introduc. Pt. ch. 3, p. 261. [ED. & CO.]

in-fer'til(e), l. in-fȯr'til; 2 in-fẽr'til, a. Not fertile or productive; sterile; bare; as, infertile soil.

It is quite certain that the hybrids are often absolutely infertile one with another. HUXLEY Origin Species test. v, p. 107. [A. 1859.] [< LL. infertilis, < in-, not; and see FERTILE.] — in-fer'tile-ly, adv. — in"fer-til'i-ty, n. — in-fer'tile-ness, n.

in-fes', l. in-fes'; 2 in-fẽs', v. t. i. 1. To be present in so continually or in such numbers as to be a source of annoyance, trouble, or danger; overrun; haunt; beset.

Man is infested with internal parasites, sometimes causing fatal effects. DARWIN Descent of Man vol. i, pt. i, ch. i, p. 12. [A. 1871.] 2†. To infest. 3†. t. To be confirmed in wickedness. [< F. infester, < L. infesto, < in, in, + festo, strike.] — in-fes'ter, n.

in"fes-ta'tion, l. in"fes-tē'shan; 2 in"fẽs-tā'shon, n. The act of infesting, or the state of being infested; disturbance.

in"fes-tiv'i-ty, l. in"fes-tiv'i-ti; 2 in"fẽs-tiv'i-ty, n. [Rare.] Want of festivity.

in"feu-da'tion, l. in"fiu-dē'shan; 2 in"fiu-dā'shon, n. 1. Feudal Law. The granting or the putting in possession of an estate in fee; also, the feudal relation.

A patriarchal household, recruited, not as in the primitive times by Adoption, but by infeudation.
H. S. MAINE Ancient Law ch. 7, p. 229. [E. R. & CO. 1887.]

2. The granting of tithes to laymen. [< LL. infeudatio(n-), < in, in, + feudum; see FEUD², n.]

in-fi'bered, a. [Rare.] Woven into the fiber.

in-fib'u-late, vt. [Rare.] To fasten with or as with a clasp, ring, padlock, or the like. [< L. infibulatus, pp. of infibulo, < in, on, + fibula; see FIBULA.] — in-fib"u-la'tion, n. The act of infibulating, or the state of being infibulated; specif., the attachment of a ring or lock to the genitals, to prevent copulation. [town in Minas-Geraes state, Brazil.

in-fi'ci-o-na'do, l. in-fi'si-o-nā'do; 2 in-fi'ẽ-si-o-nā'do, n. A in'fi-del, l. in'fi-del; 2 in'fi-dẽl, a. 1. Lacking the true faith; disbelieving; specif., rejecting the Christian or some other religion: often an opprobrious epithet; as, to the infidel Turk the Christian is the infidel.

The child Of an infidel age, he had been his own god,
His own oracle.
OWEN MEREDITH Lucile pt. i, can. 3, st. 11.

2. Caused by, manifesting, or characteristic of unbelief, especially in the religion of the Bible; hence, disloyal; recreant. 3. Of, relating to, or characteristic of infidels or infidelity; as, an infidel pamphlet. [< L. infidelis, < in, not, + fidelis, faithful, < fides, faith.]

in"fi-del'i-ty [Rare]; in"fi-del'-ca† [Rare].— in"fi-del'i-za, n. Having a tendency toward infidelity.

in'fi-del, n. 1. One who denies the existence of God; in a narrower sense, a disbeliever in the religion of the Bible; a skeptic.

I can assure them that the devil is no infidel.
HUGH MILLER Test. of the Rocks ch. 1, p. 3. [L. & CO. 1853.]

2. One who has not the faith; an unbeliever, as viewed from the standpoint of a believer in any particular religion; as, formerly a Jew was an infidel in the view of a Christian.

Thou art wise, Iderim,' said the Scot, 'wise though a Saracen, and generous though an infidel.'
SCOTT Talisman ch. 23, p. 213. [S. & W. 1874.]

3. A disbeliever in something specified; as, an infidel concerning astrology. 4†. Feudal Law. A faithless vassal. SYN.: see SKEPTIC.

in-fi-del'i-an, l. in'fi-del-i-an; 2 in'fi-dẽl-i-ẽn, n. A system having disbelief in religion as its basis.

in'fi-del'i-ty, l. in'fi-del'i-ti; 2 in'fi-dẽl'i-ty, n. [-TIES, l. -tiz; 2 -tiz, pl.] 1. The state of being an infidel; lack of belief, as in the Christian religion. The word is used loosely as a synonym of atheism, and includes in general all forms of religious unbelief, as agnosticism, skepticism, deism, and rationalism.

The infidelity of one age is not that of another, while Christianity remains ever the same.
HOPKINS Evidences of Christianity lect. xii, p. 334. [S. & S. 1878.]

2. Lack of fidelity; unfaithfulness to a trust, duty, or vow; disloyalty (of a friend, etc.); specif., violation of the marriage vow by adultery; as, infidelity is ground for divorce. 3. [Rare.] Lack of accuracy; untrustworthiness.

The infidelity of oral tradition . . . has been . . . generally recognised. RAWLINSON Historical Evidences lect. ii, p. 262, note 3. [A. 1859.]

in'fi-del-ize, l. in'fi-del-aiz; 2 in'fi-dẽl-īz, v. [-IZED; -IZING.] 1. t. To render infidel; to infidelify. II. i. To acknowledge or adopt infidelity. in'fi-del-iz-er.

in-field', vi. [Rare.] To make a field of; enclose.

in'field', l. in'fild'; 2 in'fẽld', n. 1. Baseball. The space thirty yards square within the base-lines; the diamond: distinguished from outfield; also, the infielders as a whole. See BASEBALL. 2. [Scot.] Land under tillage: distinguished from outfield. — in'field'er, n. — in'field'ing, n. Baseball. One of the players in the infield, including the three basemen, the short-stop, and the pitcher when not engaged in the specific duties of his position: distinguished from outfielder.

in fi'e-ri, l. in fai'-rai; 2 in fī'e-ri. [L.] Law. In process of accomplishment or of being done; pending: said of unfinished legal transactions.

in'fight'ing, n. In pugilism, fighting at close quarters where a blow from the shoulder can be delivered.

in'fill', l. in'fil'; 2 in'fĭl', vt. To fill in.— in'fill'ing, n. That used for filling in: filling.

in-film', l. in-film'; 2 in-fĭlm', vt. To cover with a film.

in-fil'ter, st. & vi. To enter by or as by filtration.

in-fil'trate, l. in-fil'trēt; 2 in-fĭl'trāt, v. [-TRATED; -TRATING.] I. t. 1. To cause (a liquid or gas) to enter by penetrating the pores or interstices; cause to penetrate; filter into or through.

These fluids contain but a trace of lime or magnesia or organic matters, and these can be supposed to have been infiltrated into them after their arrival on the face of the earth.
C. DENSELEY Ramoth pt. ii, ch. 3, p. 76. [A. 1883.]

2. To cause a liquid or gas to penetrate into or through the pores of; as, to infiltrate a rock with water. 3. To penetrate into or through the pores of: said of a liquid or gas; as, water infiltrates the sand.

II. i. To pass into or through pores or interstices; percolate; as, water infiltrates into the sand.

in-fil'trate, n. That which infiltrates, or which has infiltrated; specif., morbid substance which passes into the tissues of the body. See INFILTRATION.

in"fil-tra'tion, l. in"fil-trē'shan; 2 in"fĭl-trā'shon, n. 1. The act or process of infiltrating.

[Reference in Palestine] led by infiltration from fountains at the summit, clothed the hillside with rich verdure.
T. G. APPLETON Syrian Sunshine ch. 1, p. 32. [B. BROS. 1877.]

2. That which is infiltrated. Specif.: (1) Mining. The material filling a vein as the deposited from a solution in water. (2) Pathol. A diffusion of morbid matter throughout a tissue from sources outside. — fatty infiltration (Pathol.), the presence of fatty globules in the interior of a cell. — i. by ascension (Geol.), infiltration according to the infiltration theory. — in"fil-tra'tion-gal'ler-y, n. A filter-gallery. — i. theory (Geol.), the theory which accounts for the origin of most veins of metalliferous ores by deposition from solution in ascending currents of heated water. — i.-vein, n. Geol. A vein in which the minerals have been deposited from solution. — waxy i. (Pathol.), same as LARDACEOUS DISEASE.

in-fi'ma, l. in'fi-ma; 2 in'fī-ma, a. [L.] The lowest. — infima species (Logic), the lowest species, containing only individuals; a species not admitting of further subdivision.

in-fin'i-tant, l. in-fin'i-tant; 2 in-fĭn'i-tant, a. Logic. Denoting merely negative attribution: said of terms that simply exclude from a class and of propositions that use them as predicates, as in the word immaterial, or the sentence spirit is immaterial. [< LL. infinitan(t-)s, ppr. of infinito, INFINITATE.]

in-fin'i-ta-ry, l. in-fin'i-ta-ri; 2 in-fĭn'i-tā-ry, a. Pertaining to infinity or to an infinite value of a quantity.

in-fin'i-tate, l. in-fin'i-tet; 2 in-fĭn'i-tat, vt. [-TAT'ED; -TAT'ING.] 1. To make infinite. 2. Logic. To make strictly negative, as a positive term or proposition, by attaching a negative sign; as, 'pure' when infinitated becomes 'not-pure,' or 'non-pure.'

In sentences the negative form may be taken either as infinitated or as simply privative. 'Wise' implies the infinitated notion, 'not-wise' or 'non-wise,' the two together making up the universe of being; and also the privative, 'not-wise' or 'unwise.'
D. S. GREGORY Logic pt. ii, ch. 2, p. 124. [n. & bro. 1881.]

in'fi-nite, l. in'fi-nit; 2 in'fi-nit, a. 1. Without actual in'fi-nit§, } or conceivable bounds in magnitude, number, or duration; limitless; measureless; countless; as, infinite power; infinite time; an infinite distance. In this sense a thing is said to be quantitatively infinite. The word is also used of things unbounded even if measurable, as the surface of a sphere.

In speculative thinking the use of the word infinite has been characterized by the two extremes of confusion; of these, one is the confusion of the conceivable, or picturable by the imagination, with the true as proved by rational inference; the other is the confusion of the unmeasurably great with the really infinite. Thus finite space, or time, and infinite space, or time, taken as a whole, are equally inconceivable and unmeasurable by us; but the infinite, or boundless, character of both space and time may be made a matter of rational inference. The same thing is true of the word infinite as absolute, or unconditioned. Sometimes we apprehend and are constrained to believe in regard to the objects which we look upon as infinite that they are incapable of measurement.
MCCOSH Intuitions pt. ii, bk. ii, ch. 3, p. 192. [C. & BROS. 1872.]

2. Including all perfections; complete and absolute; all-embracing; perfect; as, the infinite God; infinite wisdom. In this sense a thing is qualitatively infinite. 3. Hyperbolically, very great or numerous; as, infinite pains; infinite tasks. 4. Logic. Being or indicating a negative conception; infinitated. 5. Math. (1) Limitless; designating a quantity conceived as always increasing so as to exceed any other assignable quantity in value.

Infinite quantities in this sense are made use of freely in mathematics, being regarded strictly as variables constantly increasing beyond every limit. Thus, to say that a straight line contains an infinite number of points is only to assert that the operation of dividing it into subdivisions may be carried on without end, the number of divisions growing larger and larger and the size of each smaller and smaller. Mathematicians recognize also infinite quantities greater than infinitely great with regard to another infinite quantity; and hence the conception of orders of infinity. The number of points in a plane, for instance, is infinite in a higher order than the number of points in a line. See INFINITESIMAL.

The value towards which the fraction $\frac{a}{x}$ tends as x tends toward zero is said to be infinite.
W. G. PECK in Johnson's Univ. Cyc. vol. ii, p. 1192. [J. & s. 1876.]

(2) Having the same power as, or susceptible of being placed in one-to-one correspondence with, a part of itself: said of an aggregate. 6. Mus. So composed that it may be repeated endlessly: without finale: said of a perpetual fugue. 7. Gram. Said of that form of the verb which are not limited by person or mood; namely, the infinitive, which is a substantive, and the participles, which are verbal adjectives. [< L. infinitus, < in-, not, + finis, limit; see FINE, n.]

SYN.: absolute, boundless, countless, eternal, illimitable, immeasurable, immemorial, immense, immutable, limitless, measureless, numberless, perpetual, unconditioned, unfathomable, unlimited, unmeasured. Infinite may be applied to space, time, or numerical relations. Countless, innumerable, and numberless, which denote a multitude, are in common usage vaguely employed to denote what is difficult or practically impossible to count or number, while it may fall far short of infinite; as, countless leaves, the countless sand on the seashore, innumerable battles, innumerable delays. So, too, boundless, illimitable, limitless, measureless, and unlimited are loosely used in reference to what has no apparent or readily determinable bounds or limits; as, we speak of the boundless ocean. Infinite space is without bounds, not only in fact, but in thought; infinite time is truly eternal. — Ant.: bounded, circumscribed, evanescent, finite, limited, little, measurable, moderate, narrow, restricted, shallow, short, small, transient, transitory. — doubly infinite (Math.), having two summations, each of an endless number of values. — I. Being (Philos.), a complete, all-inclusive, or absolute being; one who transcends limitation or determination: said of God or of the universe.

in"fi-nite, n. 1. An infinite quantity or magnitude. 2. [I-] God, considered as the Being whose existence is freed from all necessary relations; the Absolute in the theistic sense: usually with the definite article; as, to adore The Infinite. When used in this sense, the adjectival significance of this word should always be retained; i. e., it should always be implicitly or expressly made clear to what the characteristic of being without limits or bounds is applied. It is by doing this that mathematics reasons securely about the infinite, as theology and philosophy do not

The infinite expresses the entire absence of all limitation, and is applicable to the one infinite Being in all his attributes. The absolute expresses perfect independence, both in being and in action. The unconditioned indicates entire freedom from every encumbrance. The whole three unite in expressing the entire absence of all restriction. K.-P. Vocab. Philos. p. 257. [ED. & CO. 1878.]

Even when religion and philosophy both agree to speak of God as 'the Infinite,' for the one it is an adjective, for the other a substantive. AUBREY MOORE in Chas. Gore's Lux Mundi essay ii, p. 66. [L. M. 1890.]

3. Metaph. The sum of all being that transcends the finite; whatever lies beyond the finite in thought or fact; the limitless and immeasurable, whether of quantity, number, or duration; as, a philosophy of the infinite. 4. A great number; multitude.

in'fi-nite-ly, 1 in'fi-nit-li; 2 in'fi-nit-ly, adv. 1. In an infinite manner; to an infinite degree or extent; as, a line infinitely prolonged.

> For thy creation, although infinite,
> Is infinitely less than Thee, O God!
> BAILEY Festus, A Visit sc. 19.

2. Greatly; extremely: a hyperbolical use; as, I am infinitely indebted to you.

in'fi-nite-ness, 1 in'fi-nit-nes; 2 in'fi-nit-nĕs, n. The condition, state, or quality of being infinite.

> That I may shake my hills in infiniteness
> Of breezy laughter!
> E. B. BROWNING Earth and her Praisers st. 1.

in-fin"i-tes'i-mal, 1 in-fin"i-tes'i-mal; 2 in-fin"i-tĕs'i-mal, a. 1. Math. Infinitely small; denoting a quantity conceived as continually diminishing, so as to become less than any other quantity having an assigned value. Compare INFINITE.

> The mathematician's 'infinite' and 'infinitesimal' are merely this indefinitely great and indefinitely small; that is, quantities which may be made as great or as small as we please, without affecting the use which we are to make of them.
> F. BOWEN Modern Philos. ch. 5, p. 95. [a. 1877.]

2. So small as to be insignificant for all practical purposes; negligible.

> But the whole of this stupendous scheme, as we shall soon see, is but an infinitesimal portion of the universe of God.
> D. M. MITCHELL Planetary and Stellar Worlds lect. ix, p. 254. [o. m. & co. 1870.]

[< L. infinitum, neut. of infinitus; see INFINITE.] — infinitesimal operation (Math.), infinitesimal transformations. — in-fin"i-tes'i-mal'ness, n. A state or thing of infinitesimal smallness; the state of being infinitesimal.—in-fin"i-tes'i-mal-ly, adv. In a manner or degree measured by infinitesimals; by the minutest of the infinitesimal quantities in infinitely small quantities.—in-fin"i-tes'i-mal-ness, n. in-fin"i-tes'i-mal, n. 1. Math. A quantity conceived as less than any assignable quantity.

> Infinitesimals are used largely in the differential and integral calculus. Their use is best regarded as a system of mathematical abbreviation, whose full expression according to the method of limits, though more rigorous, would be diffuse and complex. Every power of an infinitesimal is regarded as infinitely small with regard to a lower power. See CALCULUS.
> It should be borne in mind that infinitesimals are not regarded as being actual quantities in the ordinary acceptation of the words. . . . They are introduced merely as a simplification of our reasonings. B. WILLIAMSON in Encyc. Brit. 9th ed., vol. xiii, p. 14.

2. By extension, a very minute or insignificant quantity; too small for calculation or consideration.

in-fin"i-tes'i-mal-ism, 1 in-fin"i-tes'i-mal-izm; 2 in-fin"i-tĕs'i-mal-izm, n. Med. The doctrine or practise of administering drugs in infinitesimal doses, on the theory that the healing properties of remedies are increased by subdivision, trituration, and succession.

in-fin'i-teth, } 1 in-fin'i-teth, in-fin'i-te-ēth; 2 in-fin'i-tĕth, in-fin'i-te-th, } in-fin'i-te-ĕth, a. Math. Being of the infinite order in a series; the ordinal of infinite regarded as a cardinal number; as, the infinitieth power of x (x^{∞}).

in-fin"i-tes'no"mi-al, 1 in-fin"i-tes'no-mi-al; 2 in-fin'i-tĕ-nō"mi-al. Math. I. a. Having an infinite number of terms, as a series. II. n. An expression consisting of an infinite number of terms. [< L. infinitus, boundless, + nomen, name.]

in-fin'i-tive, } 1 in-fin'i-tiv; 2 in-fin'i-tĭv. a. Without in-fin'i-tiv², } limitation of person or number: said of the infinitive mode. [< LL. infinitivus, < L. infinitus; see INFINITE.]—infinitive mode, or mood (Gram.), the infinitive.

in-fin'i-tiv(es, n. Gram. The form of the verb that expresses, without regard to person or number, the action or condition asserted by the verb; as, to love. It is usually classed as a noun, the infinitive with to being a form ending in -an, unpreceded by to, for the nominative and accusative, which was the origin of the simple infinitive (e. g., feallan, to fall); and one ending in -anne, preceded by to, and usually expressing purpose, for a dative (still used by some grammarians the gerundial or gerundive infinitive: it is equivalent to Latin supines). The modern dative infinitive, the more common form, is derived from the dative infinitive in -anne, occurs in such phrases as "they went to hear the oration;" "it was difficult to believe." To, however, is now prefixed also to the nominative infinitive, as in "to hear is to understand." In contrast with certain dead languages, such as the Latin and Greek, English has but two infinitives, present and perfect; the infinitive of other tenses is expressed by means of a periphrasis.

> In most modern languages, and in Greek and Latin, the infinitive is used as the general name of the verb; as, the verb to rise is transitive. As a noun in English, it is often contracted after auxiliaries do, will, shall, may, can, must, and used optionally after dare, help, need, please, and go in certain phrases, after rather, than, but with a negative, and after see, hear, feel, let, make, bid, help, know, find, etc. The verbal noun in -ing in certain uses is regarded by some grammarians as an infinitive; as, seeing (to be seen) is believing (to believe), and is then called the participial infinitive.—split (or cleft) infinitive, the separation of the preposition to and the infinitive proper by some intervening word, usually an adverb, as in "to quickly advance." Its use, tho decried by purists, has been common among standard authors since the 17th century. Its justification lies in the fact that it serves to give a more exact meaning than the placing of the adverb elsewhere. Thus in the following citation the word promptly is intimately connected with the word notify, and this fact would not be brought out by placing the adverb before to or after notify.

> "A practice that seriously handicaps the police in their effort to stamp out this form of crime." Black Hand counsel is the failure of persons threatened to promptly notify the department of the receipt of threats. It is the duty of every citizen to help protect himself by promptly notifying Police Headquarters when a crime is threatened or committed."
> New York Herald (editorial) Feb. 2, '11.

—in-fin'i-tiv-al or in-fin"i-ti'val, a. Gram. Of or pertaining to the infinitive.—in-fin'i-tiv-al-ly, adv. After the manner of the infinitive.—in-fin'i-tiv(e-ly₂, adv. Gram. In or after the manner of an infinitive.

in-fin"i-te'to, 1 in'fi-ni'to; 2 in'fi-ni'to, a. [It.] Mus. Same as in-fin"i-to-sah'so-lute, a. Infinite as well as absolute.

in-fin"i-to-sin"tes'i-mal, a. Infinitesimal in relation to infinitesimal quantities; being an infinitesimal of the second order.

in-fi-tude, 1 in-fi'i-tūd; 2 in-fi'i-tūd, n. 1. The quality of being infinite; infiniteness; infinity.

> The infinitude of God may be resolved into two points, which are defined and described as two attributes, eternity and immensity. H. B. SMITH Christian Theology pt. i, p. 17. [a. a. s. 1884.]

2. An infinite number, quantity, duration, or extension; an infinity. [< L. infinitus; see INFINITE.]

in-fin'i-ty, 1 in-fin'i-ti; 2 in-fin'i-ty, n. [=ries, 1-tiz; 2-tiz, pl.] 1. The quality or state of being infinite, in any sense; infiniteness; immeasurability; boundlessness; perfection; as, there are many degrees of mathematical infinity; the infinity of the Almighty. 2. An infinite or very great quantity; boundless or immeasurable extension or duration; especially, space regarded as boundless; as, an infinity of details; also, an indefinite number. 3. Alg. An infinite number or quantity; the assured limit of a variable that increases without limit in the ordinary sense: denoted by ∞. 4. The portion of space that lies at an infinite distance; specifically, in perspective, as a mathematical fiction. See phrases. 5. Geom. The point or series of points in space that by supposition lie at an infinite distance from the definite point in question, and to which a line or plane may be considered as capable of being produced. The infinity of a line is a point; the infinity of a plane is a line or series of points, known respectively as point at infinity and line at infinity. Sphere at infinity is generally represented as an imaginary degenerate sphere ending in a closed point.

> The sun, of a point at infinity is a very important one in modern geometry; and we have also to consider the paradoxical statement that in plane geometry, or say as regards the plane, infinity is a right line. ARTHUR CAYLEY and E. B. ELLIOTT in Encyc. Brit. 11th ed., vol. vii, p. 654.

—Infinity of a function, a value of the unknown quantity for which the function becomes infinite.—in-fin'i-typlug" n. Mech. A plug or key in a box of resistance-coils, which on being withdrawn leaves an open circuit, or infinite resistance, between the coils.—line at i., the fictitious line in which two parallel planes meet; that part of a plane imagined to lie at an infinite distance.—point at i., the fictitious point where two parallel lines meet.

in-firm'i, vt. To render doubtful or invalid.

in-firm', 1 in'fĕrm'; 2 in-fĕrm', a. 1. Lacking in bodily or mental strength; feeble or weak, as from age or disease. 2. Lacking soundness, stability, or firmness; insecure; feeble; irresolute; as, infirm of purpose; an infirm prop. 3. Not legally secure; voidable. [OF, < L. infirmus, not, + firmus, firm.] Syn. see FRAGILE.—in-firm'a-tive(ly, a. Tending to make void; weakening.—in-firm'ly, adv. In an infirm manner; weakly.—in-firm'ness, n. The state or quality of being infirm.

in"fir-ma'ri-an, 1 in"fer-mē'ri-an; 2 in"fĭr-mā'ri-an, n. A person having charge of a monastic hospital, or who is delegated to perform hospital service. in-fir'ma-rer; in-fir'ma-rer, n.

in-fir'ma-ry, 1 in-fûr'mə-ri; 2 in-fĭr'ma-ry, n. [=RIES, 1-riz; 2-rĭz, pl.] A place for the reception or treatment of the sick; especially, a small hospital or an office for free treatment of illness or infirmity; as, the Eye and Ear Infirmary.

> The poordaw infirmary in large cities, so far as the buildings and equipment are concerned, often leave much to be desired.
> Sir HENRY BURDETT in Encyc. Brit. 11th ed., vol. xiii, p. 793.

in-firm'ed', 1 in-fûrmd'; 2 in-fĭrmd', a. Suffer from an in-fir'mi-ty, 1 in-fûr'mi-ti; 2 in-fĭr'mi-ty, n. [=RIES, 1-tiz; 2 -tiz, pl.] 1. A physical, mental, or moral weakness or flaw; enfeebling disease; deformity; eccentricity; fault; as, bad temper is his worst infirmity.

> That thirst [for applause], if the last infirmity of noble minds, is also the first infirmity of weak ones.
> ROBERT SOUTHEY The Doctor and Life and Letters of Bunyan lect. i, p. 28. [w. & t. 1880.]

2. The state or quality of being infirm physically, mentally, or morally; debility; infirmness; as, the infirmity of age. [< F. infirmité, < L. infirmita(t-)s, < infirmus; see INFIRM.] Syn. see FOIBLE; ILLNESS.—natural infirmity, a natural inability to govern one's actions in accordance with a law of nature.

in-fis'ta-ble, a. [Rare.] Incapable of being fistulous.

in-fis'tu-lat'ed, } in-fis'tiu-lēt'ed; 2 in-fis'tū-lāt'ed, a. in-fis'tu-la'ted, } Containing fistulas; formed into a fistula. BAILEY. [< LL. infistulatus, pp. of infistulo, < L. in, in, + fistula, fistula.]

in'fit, 1 in'fit; 2 in'fit, vt. [Local, U. S.] To supply (a vessel or crew) with stores for use in port.—in'fit, n.—in'fit'er, n.

in-fix', 1 in-fiks'; 2 in-fĭks', vt. 1. To fix in by thrusting or piercing; fasten in; firmly implant; as, to infix a truth. 2. Gram. To insert (an infix). [< OF. infixer, < L. infixus, pp. of infigo, < in, in, + figo, fix.]—infixion, n. [Rare.] The act of infixing.

2. [Rare.] The condition of being firmly fastened or inserted.

in'fix, n. Gram. A modifying addition inserted in the body of a word. Compare PREFIX and SUFFIX.

in-flame', 1 in-flēm'; 2 in-flām', v. [=LAMED'; =LAM'ING.] I. t. 1. To stimulate or rouse to unnatural action or violent activity; stir up or excite to passion; as, the tale of wrong inflamed his ambition; inflamed with lust. 2. To heat morbidly; especially, to cause inflammation or congestion in; as, neglect inflamed his wound; his eyes were inflamed. 3. To cause to burst into flame; kindle; figuratively, to light up, or cause to appear as by a fire; as, inflamed wood; trees inflamed with autumn colors.

> The carbonic oxide may be inflamed at the mouth of the tube.
> ELIZA ANN STEVENS Qualitative Chem. Analysis pt. i, p. 80. [v. n. & co. 1879.]

4. [Rare] To make larger; aggravate; augment.

II. i. 1. To break into flame; become heated or glowing. 2. To become heated by disorder; by circulants; suffer from inflammation. [< F. enflammer, < L. inflammo, < in, in; and see FLAME, v.] SYN.: see INCENSE.

—in-flam'ed-ly, a. Her. Having the tongues of flame; flamant. 2. Affected with inflammation. 3. Excited with passion; enraged. 4. [Rare.] Kindled in flame; inflammable.

in-flam'ed-ly, adv.—in-flam'ing-ly, adv.—in-flam'er, n. One who or that which inflames; an instigator; exciter.

in-flam'ma-bi(e'ı, 1 in-flam'a-bil; 2 in-flăm'ă-bl, a-bl, a. Readily inflamed, in any sense; easily set on fire or excited; as, an inflammable gas; an excited and very inflammable state of mind; feeling runs high.

Mountain Inflamed.
Arms of Meole of Lewis.

Steele's heart was of very inflammable composition. THACKERAY Henry Esmond bk. ii, p. 109. [n.]

Syn.: see ARDENT.—inflammable air (Old Chem.), hydrogen.—in-flam'ma-bil'i-ty, n. The state or quality of being inflammable in any sense. in-flam'ma-bi(e-ness₂, —in-flam'ma-ble, n. An inflammable thing or substance.

in"flam-ma'tion, 1 in'fla-mē'shən; 2 in'flăk-mā'shon, n. 1. Pathol. A morbid process in some part of the body characterized, in its simplest form and when affecting an external part, by heat, redness, swelling, and pain, accompanied by an escape of some of the constituents of the blood into the tissue of the part affected, or on its surface. 2. The act of inflaming, or state of being inflamed; a setting on fire.

> One of the commonest experiments in chemistry is that of producing inflammation by causing two bodies perfectly dry to > BREWSTER Natural Magic letter xiii, p. 313. [l. m. 1838.]

3. Ballistics. The process of ignition of a charge of powder and production of flame enveloping all surfaces. 4. [Rare.] Violent excitement; heat; tumultuousness. 5. Increase in price. [F., < L. inflammatio(n-), < inflammo; see INFLAME.] — obliterative inflammation, that inflammation of the membrane lining a cavity in the body which, by causing the opposite sides to adhere, obliterates the cavity.

in-flam'ma-to-ry, 1 in-flam'a-to-ri; 2 in-flăm'a-to-ry, a. 1. Tending to produce heat or excitement; incitive; enkindling; especially, calculated to arouse evil passions, riot, etc.; seditious; as, an inflammatory oration. 2. Of the nature of, pertaining to, or characterized by inflammation; as, an inflammatory fever.

> His nose was prodigiously long, crooked, and inflammatory.
> FOR Tales, Adventures of Hans Pfaall p. 213. [p. & c.]

3. Inducing or provoking inflammation; as, an inflammatory plaster. in-flam'ma-tive(ness, —inflammatory crust, same as BUFFY COAT.—in-flam'ma-to-ri-ly, adv.—in-flam'ma-to-ry, n. One who or that which inflames.

in-fla'tant, 1 in-flē'tant; 2 in-flā'tant, a. That which causes inflation, as gas in a balloon.

in-flate', 1 in-flēt'; 2 in-flāt', v. [IN-FLAT'ED; IN-FLAT'ING.] I. t. 1. To cause to expand by filling as with gas or air; distend; swell; as, to inflate a balloon. Hence, to swell or increase unduly, unnaturally, or excessively; as, so that the nominal value greatly exceeds the real; as, to inflate the currency.

> The state of the country's business has inflated the stocks of our large corporations. B. F. COWEN in Vincent's You and I, Business Integrity p. 641. [r. b. d. 1887.]

2. Figuratively, to puff up; elate; as, to inflate one with pride. 3. To cause to be opulence, as food.

II. i. To become distended, as by gas within; swell out; expand; as, the balloon inflates slowly. [< L. inflatus, pp. of inflo, < in, in, + flo, blow.]

—in-fla'ted-ness, n. The state of being inflated.—in-fla'ter, n. One who or that which inflates.—in-flat'ing-ly, adv. So as to inflate; by means of inflation.—in-fla'tor, n. Any mechanical device for inflating.

in-flat'ed, 1 in-flēt'ed; 2 in-flāt'ĕd, pa. 1. Puffed out; distended; swollen, as by air or gas. 2. Bot. & Zool. Hollowed or puffed out, as if with air; distended; dilated in all directions; bullate; as, an inflated pericarp; an inflated shell, as distinguished from one that is ventricose. 3. Overloaded with figures of speech and high-sounding words; pompous; bombastic; magniloquent. 4. Enlarged or increased unduly or unnaturally; increased unjustifiably; as, inflated values. 5. Puffed up with conceit. in-flate'i-.—in-flat'ed-ness, n.

in-fla'tile, } 1 in-flē'til; 2 in-flā'til, a. Mus. Played by in-fla'til, } wind: said of instruments.

in-fla'tion, 1 in-flē'shən; 2 in-flā'shon, n. 1. The act of inflating, or the state of being inflated; distention; expansion; figuratively, bombast; conceit; as, the inflation of a bubble; inflation of style. 2. Expansion or extension beyond natural or proper limits or so as to exceed normal or just value; specif., overissue of currency, or the state resulting therefrom; opposed to contraction. 3. That which is inflated or puffed up. [< L. inflatio(n-), < inflo; see INFLATE.]

in-fla'tion-list, 1 in-flē'shən-list; 2 in-flā'shon-list, n. U. S. Polit. An advocate or believer in the issuing of an abnormally large amount of currency, especially of bank- or treasury-notes not convertible into coin, or of coin below standard value: opposed to contractionist.

—inflationist school, the political party begotten 1862 and 1879 during which payment in specie was suspended. [inspiration; inflation; afflatus.

in-fla'tus, 1 in-flē'tus; 2 in-flā'tus, n. [L.] Breathing into; in-flect', 1 in-flekt'; 2 in-flĕct', v. I. t. Gram. To vary the form of, especially by change of endings, so as to express different relations in the sentence; decline (a noun, pronoun, or adjective), conjugate (a verb), or compare (an adjective or adverb). See CONJUGATE; DECLINE. 2. To turn aside from a straight or normal course; bend; deflect; curve.

Inflection of the voice.

Inflection at the distance of the inflecting body from the aperture or from the focus of divergence.

BREWSTER Newton p. 104. [n. 1828.]

3. To modulate, as the voice.

II. i. To take grammatical inflection; as, the verb inflects by endings. [< L. inflecto, < in, in, + flecto, bend.]

in-flect'ed, 1 in-flekt'ed; 2 in-flĕct'ĕd, pa. 1. Bot. & Zool. Bent or turned inward or downward, as a leaf or tentacle; inflexed. 2. Gram. Possessing inflection; as, an inflected dialect.

> An inflected language is one that joins words together, and makes them into sentences, by means of changes made in ordinary and auxiliary words, but by means of changes made in the main words themselves.
> ROBERT GORDON LATHAM Engl. Eng. Tongue § 30, p. 32. [ch. p. 1873.]

in-flec'tion, } 1 in-flek'shən; 2 in-flĕk'shon, n. 1. The in-flex'ion, } act of inflecting, the state of being inflected, or that which is inflected; a bending or bend; curvature; angle.

> The Saracen came on . . . ; managing his steed more by his limbs, and the inflection of his body, than by any use of the reins.
> SCOTT Talisman p. 11. [n. v. & co.]

2. Gram. (1) The changes undergone by words to express the relations of case, number, gender, person, tense, etc. (2) Inflected forms; as, adjectives and pronouns is called declension; that of verbs, conjugation. (3) An inflected form; also, an inflectional element or suffix.

> The abandonment of inflection has materially augmented the use of the prepositions in English, although our Anglo-Saxon allowed a wide scope to the preposition with the case.
> MARSHALL Engl. Lang. p. 219. [n. bros. 1874.]

3. Modulation or change of pitch in the voice in elocution or singing; specif., a departure from the reciting tone, in a chant.

> A great many . . . words . . . are softened and sweetened, and made almost poetical in their sound by the least bit of inflection. WILLIAM BLACK Princess of Thule p. 52. [n.]

4. Optics. Diffraction. 5. Geom. A change from concavity to convexity, p in a curve; also, the place where such change occurs, as at p in the figure.

Inflection.

—point of inflection, the point p in the figure, where the tangent ceases and the new tangent in the opposite direction begins.— in-flec'tion-al, in-flex'ion-al, a. Capable of or showing inflection; belonging or relating to inflection; as, inflectional languages.

Unless we succeed in tracing each word in English or in any inflectional language back to its root, we have not traced it back to its real origin. MAX MÜLLER Science of Language second series, lect. ii, p. 97. [s. 1875.]

Languages are either inflectional or non-inflectional, and the difference between inflection and agglutination lies in the fact that in the non-inflectional language the formative parts have an intelligible meaning of their own. The term inflectional is generally used to denote the Semitic and Indo-European group of languages. It is now usually admitted that the primitive case-endings may have been originally independent words. Inflection is the adding to the initial or internal as well as final, and of this the Semitic dialects give many examples. The analytic type of language has been gradually taking the place of the inflectional, as illustrated in modern English. It is the opinion of philologists that the inflectional languages are more compact, and linguistically more beautiful, but more rigid and trammeling for intellectual pursuits.— in-flec'tion-al-ly, adv. in-flex'ion-al-ly:.— in-flec'tion-less, a. Having no inflection. in-flex'ion-less:.

in-flec'tive, 1 in-flek'tiv; 2 in-flĕc'tiv, a. 1. Having in-flec'tive,) power to bend or turn aside. 2. Gram. Possessing inflection; inflectional.

Outside the Semitic, at any rate, one should not speak of inflection and non-inflectional languages, but of languages more inflective and less inflective.

ing, suffix. I. A verbal noun corresponding to the Latin suffixes -ant, -ent), used to form present participles, as forming, seeing; these participles being often used adjectively; as, dancing girls; a raging lion.

The A.-S. ending of the present participle -ende, often changed to -inde, eventually was confused with -inge, and became the standard English form, except in the northern dialect in England and Scotland, which retains -and still retains, the suffix -ande modified into -ande, -and. This similarity of the present participle and the verbal noun gave rise to the confusion of their uses and forms. Verbal nouns in -ing may denote continuous indefinite action or process of being and are generally used in the singular, as cheering, skating (the plural being used to express the concrete, as sweepings, leavings), and such action may be particularized as a meeting, a gathering, or be habitual, as reading, singing, smoking, and in this sense such nouns are often used to denote the result of such action, as, the stitching, the writing, or that which is used in performing an act, as roofing, scaffolding. The most distinctive development of the verbal noun in -ing, which is peculiar to English, is its use as a gerund, that is, as a noun in an oblique case, with certain verbal characteristics, especially those of governing an object and being qualified by an adverb; as, he was engaged in writing a letter hastily; he dislikes running his press at night, etc.

GEORGELY Glances at Europe p. 81. [o. w. & o. 1851.]

2. Being in necessary relation or pertaining as a property, condition, or attribute.

The document has the force of speaking to the nation by addresses or proclamations, a right not expressly conferred by the Constitution, but inherent in his position.
JOHN BIGELOW Life of Franklin vol. i, p. 52. [MACM. 1888.]

3. Biol. Derived from germ-cells; congenital. [< L. inhærent(s)-s, ppr. of inhæreo; see INHERE.]

Syn.: congenital, essential, immanent, inborn, inbred, indispensable, indwelling, infixed, ingrained, inhering, innate, inseparable, internal, intrinsic, inwrought, native, natural, subjective. Immanent is a philosophic term, to denote that which dwells in or pervades any substance or spirit without necessarily being a part of it, and without reference to any working out. (See SUBJECTIVE.) That which is inherent is an integral part of that to which it belongs. It is usually a thought of with reference to some outworking or effect; as, an inherent difficulty. God is said to be immanent (not inherent) in the universe. Frequently, intrinsic and inherent can be interchanged, but inherent applies to qualities, while intrinsic applies to essence, so that to speak of intrinsic excellence conveys higher praise than if we say inherent excellence. Inherent and intrinsic may be said of persons or things; congenital, inborn, inbred, innate, apply to living beings. Congenital is frequent in medical and legal use with special application to defects; as, congenital idiocy. Innate and inborn are almost identical, but innate is preferred in philosophic use, as when we speak of innate ideas: that which is inborn, congenital, or innate may be original with the individual, but that which is inbred is inherited. Ingrained signifies dyed in the grain, and denotes that which is deeply wrought into substance or character.—ANT.: accidental, casual, external, extrinsic, fortuitous, incidental, outward, substitutary, superadded, superficious, superimposed, supplemental, transient, unconnected, unimportant.

—in"he-ren'tial, a. 1. Of or pertaining to inherence. 2. Logic. Of a nature which sets forth the existence or nonexistence of the predicate in its relation to the subject.—in-her'ent-ly, adv. By inherence.

in-her'it, 1 in-her'it; 2 in-hĕr'ĭt, v. I. t. 1. To receive by nature from one's ancestors; have implanted, as ancestral peculiarities or characteristics, in one's body at birth; as, to inherit a family weakness.

Just as a man may inherit the stamp of the bodily features and characters of his parents, he may also inherit the impress of their evil passions and propensities.
MAUDSLEY Responsibility in Mental Disease p. 29. [c. 1873.]

2. Law. To take by descent, as distinguished from taking by devise; come into (property) by succession through the operation of law.

The rich man's son inherits lands,
And piles of brick, and stone, and gold.
LOWELL The Heritage st. 1.

3. To receive or enjoy as a divine patrimony; be or become divinely endowed with.

"The meek," said Christ, 'inherit the earth.' They do not buy it; they do not conquer it; but they inherit it.
DRUMMOND Addresses, Pax Vobiscum p. 105. [ʀ. a. 1892.]

4. To receive by transmission from predecessors; possess as having been handed down from the past.

The modern world has inherited from Rome the useful and necessary, from Greece the refined and ornamental.
JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS Italy vol. i, p. 23. [ʀ. 1884.]

5†. To possess, or become possessed of. 6†. To succeed as heir. 7†. To place in possession: with of.

II. i. 1. To come into possession of property by inheritance; succeed as heir by due operation of law; as, a son inherits from his father. 2. Figuratively, to derive its being or characteristics; as, astronomy inherits from astrology. [< OF. inheriter, enheriter, < LL. inheredito, heredito, < L. in, in, + hæres (hered-), heir.]

—in-her'i-tor, n. One who inherits or may inherit; especially, a male heir.—in-her'i-trix, n. A female heir. in-her'i-tress† is less frequent.

in-her'it-a-bl(e², 1 in-her'it-ə-bl; 2 in-hĕr'ĭt-a-bl, a. 1. Law. (1) Transmissible by descent; descendible to an heir by mere operation of law. (2) Capacitated or qualified to take by birth; capable of receiving by hereditary blood. 2. That may be transmitted by ancestors; heritable; as, inheritable estates; inheritable vices. [OF., < inheriter; see INHERIT.] —in-her'it-a-bil'i-ty, n. in-her'it-a-bl(e-ness²†.—in-her'it-a-bly, adv.

in-her'i-tance, 1 in-her'i-tans; 2 in-hĕr'ĭ-tanç, n. 1. That which is or is to be inherited, whether property, or physical, mental, family or racial characteristics; whatever is transmitted by ancestors; as, a splendid heritage; as, an inheritance of woe. Compare HEREDITY.

Two distinct elements are included under the term 'inheritance,' namely, the transmission of characters and the development.
DARWIN Descent of Man vol. i, p. 270. [ʟ. 1871.]

Their large inheritance of English liberties saved them from the necessity and from the temptation to upset their old political institutions.
BANCROFT United States vol. v, p. 111. [ʟ.]

2. Law. An estate that descends to the heir of the last holder, and falls to him by operation of law; a distributive share of the estate of the last owner which is descended from an ancestor, when so indicated by will. While in its broadest sense the word inheritance is applied to both real and personal property, passing either by will or through the intestacy of the former owner, in its more restricted legal sense it covers only the transmission of real property by descent. Strictly speaking, personal property does not pass by inheritance, but is handed over to the deceased representatives of the deceased intestate to be administered and distributed. Real property passing by inheritance is known as an estate of inheritance, and is classified as estate in fee and fee tail. The former is termed general inheritance, since it falls to any relative of the deceased, whether lineal or collateral; the latter is termed special inheritance, and consists of lineal descendants, as the issue of a particular wife, male issue only, etc. These distinctive characteristics have gradually been added to use fee as it existed in its original feudal sense.

3. The act of inheriting; as, the land came to him by inheritance.

The right of inheritance, or descent to the children and relations of the deceased, seems to have been allowed much earlier than the right of devising by testament. BLACKSTONE Commentaries p. 11.

4. A possession or blessing bestowed by divine gift; as, an inheritance of glory. 5. Ownership or acquisition, or something acquired or enjoyed. [< OF. enheritance, < enheriter; see INHERIT.] in-her'it-ager.—alternative inheritance (Biol.), the transmission to alternating generations of descendants of the characteristics of either parent, as that of the father to the odd and of the mother to the even generations.—ancestral i. (Biol.), the theory that each ancestor contributes proportionately to the characteristics of a descendant.—biparental i. (Biol.), the equal transmission of characteristics by both parents to the child.—blended i. (Biol.), the form of inheritance in which the blended characters of the two parents are intimately mingled in the offspring.—crossed i. (Biol.), the inheritance of characteristics from a parent of one sex by a child of the opposite constitution of his mother, or by a daughter of that of her father.—exclusive i. (Biol.), that form of inheritance in which the characters of one of the parents predominate in the offspring.—i. tax, a tax imposed on inherited estates.—material basis of i. (Biol.), the essential element transmitted by a parent to a child in which the power of reproduction is supposed to lie. See HEREDITY.—particulate or mosaic i. (Biol.), that form of inheritance in which the peculiarities of the two parents are separately expressed in different parts of the same organism. See HEREDITY.—use i., inheritance by a descendant of characteristics developed during the lifetime of the parent.

in-her'it-or, n. Same as INHERARSE.

in'hex'a-gon, 1 in'heks'ə-gon; 2 in'hĕks'a-gŏn, n. An inscribed hexagon.

Noah Webster's name abides, connected with the great work which he initiated, and the monument will keep his name imperishable. H. E. SCUDDER Noah Webster p. 279. [H. M. & CO. 1882.]

II. i. 1. To perform the first act or rite. 2. To commence. 3. To receive initiation. [< L. initiatus, pp. of initio, < in, into, + eo, go.] Syn.: see BEGIN; INSTALL.

in-i'ti-ate, a. 1. Instructed in the rudiments or secrets; initiated; newly admitted, as into a secret society; as, secrets known only to the initiate. 2†. Initial; begun; commenced; new. 3†. Characteristic of an inexperienced person. [< L. initiatus; see INITIATE, v.] — initiate tenant by courtesy (Law), a husband who has an interest in his wife's estate after the birth of a child who may inherit, but prior to the death of the wife. This right of the husband, termed courtesy i., was abolished in England by the Married Woman's Property Acts.

in-i'ti-ate, n. One who has been initiated.

in-i"ti-a'tion, 1 in-ish"ɪ-ē'shən; 2 ĭn-ĭsh"i-ā'shon, n. 1. The act of initiating or instituting; a taking of the primary steps; as, the initiation of the enterprise.

The . . . [Iroquois] league . . . exhibits to us a people advancing in many ways towards the initiation of a self-originated civilisation. D. WILSON Prehis. Man p. 144. [MACM. 1865.]

in-i'ti-a-tive, } 1 in-ish'ɪ-ə-tiv; 2 ĭn-ĭsh'i-a-tĭv, a. Of in-i'ti-a-tiv[s], } or pertaining to initiation; serving to initiate or begin; initiatory; as, initiative genius.

in-i'ti-a-tiv(e[s], n. 1. An introductory step or action; a first move; beginning; start; lead; as, an initiative toward good; he took the initiative. 2. The power of initiating; ability to originate or start; specif., the aptitude to develop or undertake new enterprises. 3. The right to propose legislative projects; as, in the United States the initiative in legislation for raising revenue belongs to the House of Representatives. [F., < L. initio; see INITIATE, v.] — the initiative, the referendum, and the recall (U. S. Polit.), the right vested in a number of voters in some States to (1) submit to all the registered voters of a State (or city) a proposition for their approval which, if carried, becomes effective as a law — the initiative; (2) require that a law passed by a legislature (or an ordinance adopted by a municipality) be referred to voters for approval or rejection — the referendum; (3) displace a judge or other official, as a mayor, if he does not receive the largest number of votes cast at a special election held on demand of a required number of voters — the recall.

in-i'ti-a"tor, 1 in-ish'ɪ-ē"tər or -tor; 2 ĭn-ĭsh'i-ā"tor, n. [LL.] One who initiates.

in-i'ti-a-to-ry, 1 in-ish'ɪ-ə-tō-rɪ; 2 ĭn-ĭsh'i-a-tō-ry, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or making an initiation or beginning; introductory; as, the initiatory step. 2. Initiating or serving to initiate; admitting by ceremony or instruction.— in-i'ti-a-to-ri-ly, adv.

in-i'ti-a-to-ry, n. [Rare.] An introductory rite.

in-jec'tor, 1 in-jek'tər or -tor; 2 ĭn-jĕc'tor, n. 1. One who or that which injects. 2. Mech. An apparatus by which a stream of fluid, as steam, is made to carry with it a current of another fluid, as water or air, and deliver the latter in a stream of reduced diameter against a pressure as great per square inch as that of the motive fluid, as where steam is made to deliver water to the boiler supplying the steam. [< L. injectus; see INJECT.] — in-jec'tor-con-dens"er, n. Same as INJECTION-CONDENSER. See under CONDENSER.

Injector.
Steam is admitted through the steam-inlet (a) and, forcing the air out of the combining-tube (b,b), creates a partial vacuum in the water-inlet (c). Water entering to fill the partial vacuum surrounds the steam-nozle (d), causing sudden condensation, and the energy of the water-jet so produced drives it and the water which has entered (b) into the tube (e) and thence into the boiler. Excess of water or steam escapes through the overflow (f). g, handle for regulating flow of steam.

in-jeer', 1 in-jīr'; 2 ĭn-jēr', vt. [Scot.] To obtrude.

in-junct', 1 in-juŋkt'; 2 ĭn-jŭnct', vt. [Colloq.] To place a legal injunction upon; restrain by injunction.

in-junc'tion, 1 in-juŋk'shən; 2 ĭn-jŭnc'shon, n. 1. The act of enjoining, or that which is enjoined; a command or order from one in authority; mandate.

This violent tendency to idolatry accounts for the strict injunctions under which they [Israelites] were bound, by divine command, not to worship any image.
J. FLAXMAN Lectures on Sculpture p. 33. [J. M. 1829.]

2. Hence, urgent advice or admonition; exhortation; precept; as, an injunction to return early.

—in-junc'tive, a. Such as to enjoin.—-ly, adv.

2. That which injures; a source of harm; as, the swamp is an injury to the neighborhood. 3. A wrong or damage done to another in his person, rights, property, or reputation; the unlawful infringement or privation of rights. 4†. Abuse. [< F. injure, < L. injuria, < in-, not, + jus (jur-), right.]

Syn.: blemish, damage, detriment, disadvantage, evil, harm, hurt, impairment, loss, mischief, outrage, prejudice, wrong. Injury signifies the violation of a right, generally by law or right; hence, something contrary to some standard of right or good; whatever reduces the utility, beauty, or desirableness of anything to one who has a claim to it; persons, whatever is so done as to operate adversely to one in his person, rights, property, or reputation is an injury; the word is especially used of whatever mars the integrity of the body or causes pain; the reward from the work his injuries were found to be very slight. Damage (L. damnum, loss) is that which occasions loss to the possessor; hence, any impairment of value, often with the suggestion of fault on the part of the one causing it. Detriment (L. deterere, to rub or wear away) is similar in meaning, but far milder. Detriment may affect value or utility, damage affects current worth or utility; as a rule, the slightest use of an article by a purchaser operates to its detriment if again offered for sale, but the article may have undergone the slightest damage. Damage is partial; loss is properly absolute as far as it is predicated at all; the loss of a ship implies that it is gone beyond recovery; the loss of the rudder is a damage to the ship; but since the ship is saved still leaves a part, we may speak of a partial or a total loss. Evil commonly suggests suffering or sin, or both; as, the evils of poverty; the social evil. Harm is closely synonymous with injury; it may apply to body, mind, or estate, but always affects real worth, while injury may concern only estimated value. A hurt is an injury that causes pain, physical or mental; a slight hurt may be no real harm. Mischief is disarrangement, trouble, or harm usually caused by some voluntary agent, with or without injurious intent; a child's thoughtless act may do great mischief; wrong is harm done with evil intent. See BANE; BLEMISH; INJUSTICE. Compare synonyms for CRIMINAL.—ANT.: advantage, amelioration, benefit, blessing, boon, help, improvement, remedy, service, utility.

in-jus'tice, 1 in-jusʻtis; 2 in-jŭsʻtis, n. A violation or injus'tiss, } denial of justice; an act or omission that is contrary to justice; injury; wrong; iniquity; as, the injustice of unequal taxes. [F., < L. injustitia, < in-, not, + justus; see JUST, a.] Syn.: grievance, iniquity, injury, unfairness, unjustness, wrong. In legal usage a wrong involves injury to person, property, or reputation, as the result of evil intent; injustice applies to civil damage or loss, not necessarily involving injury to person or property, as by misrepresentation of goods which does not amount to a legal warranty. In popular usage injustice may involve no direct injury to person, property, interest, or character, and no harmful intent, while wrong always involves both; one who attributes another's truly generous act to a selfish motive does him injustice; unfairness in the original sense is a want of or a deviation from equity; but it is now applied in the widest sense to any form of ill-doing. Compare synonyms for CRIMINAL.—ANT.: equity, fairness, honesty, impartiality, integrity, justice, rectitude, right, righteousness.

[< AS. innemest, < innan, IN.]

inn, 1 in; 2 in, n. 1. A public house for entertainment for man, and sometimes for beast, of travelers; a place where meals and lodgings are obtainable by all proper persons who choose to visit it; hostelry, tavern: the legal term, now largely displaced in popular and literary usage by hotel, and generally restricted to small old-fashioned establishments. Of late years, however, it has been adopted as a title by some establishments that make especial pretensions to elegance.

The words inn, tavern, and hotel are used synonymously to designate what is ordinarily and popularly known as an inn or tavern, or place for the entertainment of travelers, and where all their wants can be supplied. A restaurant where meals only are furnished is not an inn or tavern.

An inn is distinguished from a private boarding-house mainly in that the keeper of the latter is at liberty to choose his guests, while the innkeeper is obliged to entertain and furnish all travelers of good conduct and means of payment with what they may have occasion for, as such travelers, while on their way.
H. C. BLACK Law Dict. p. 628.

2. A house of residence for law students. [< AS. inn, < in, in.] — Inn,

Lum had the humblest Southerner's innate politeness.
OCTAVE THANET in Century Magazine May, 1887, p. 120.

2. Study, in metaphysics, is exemplified by a given in or furnished with the constitution of the intellect or mind, rather than acquired by experience; intuitive; as, a priori ideas and truths are innate. See INNATE IDEA, under IDEA.

The existence of innate ideas or truths or mental principles has been one of the most controverted topics in philosophy. Since the word innate, thus applied, has come to be understood as signifying the constitutional forms of mental functioning which, whether an original endowment of nature or an acquirement through many generations of experience, are now universal and necessary with the individual human being, the sharpness and fruitlessness of the debate have mostly disappeared.
Whatever is generally true, . . . true under all circumstances and conditions, . . . that is an innate truth.
F. BOWEN Modern Philos. p. 43. [A. 1877.]

Syn.: blameless, clean, clear, faultless, guileless, guiltless, immaculate, innocuous, luuoxious, inoffensive, pure, right, righteous, sinless, spotless, stainless, upright, virtuous. Innocent is a negative word, expressing less than righteous, upright, or virtuous, which imply knowledge of good and evil, with free choice of the good. A little child or a lamb is innocent; a tried and faithful man is righteous, upright, virtuous. Immaculate, pure, and sinless may be used either of one who has never known the possibility of evil or of one who has perfectly and triumphantly resisted it. Innocent is used of inanimate substances in the sense of harmless; as, an innocent remedy, i. e., one not dangerous, even if not helpful. Innocent in a specific case signifies free from the guilt of a particular act, even tho the total character may be very evil: as, the thief was found to be innocent of the murder. See GUILTLESS, PURE.—ANT.: see synonyms for CENSURABLE, CRIMINAL.—innocent ball (Croquet), the ball that was played last.—in'no-cent-ly, adv. Guilelessly; harmlessly.

in'no-cent, n. 1. One who is free from moral delinquency; a person unstained by sin or crime; a young child. 2. pl. [I.] Specif., the young children put to death by Herod (Matt., ii, 16), accounted as Christian martyrs, and frequently called the Holy Innocents. 3. One who is artless, guileless, simple, or stupid; an idiot; a fool; as, I was an innocent to be thus deceived.

An idiot or one otherwise deficient in intellect, is called an "innocent," or one who does not hurt: this use of 'innocent' assuming that to do hurt or harm is the chief employment to which men turn their intellectual powers.
TRENCH On the Study of Words p. 97. [R. P. & C. 1888.]

4. Bot. Same as INNOCENCE, n., 6 (1).

Syn.: see IDIOT.—Innocents' day, a Roman Catholic and Anglican Church festival, Dec. 28, commemorating the slaughter of the Innocents by Herod the Great. Holy Innocents' day.—slaughter of the Innocents. 1. The massacre of the Innocents by Herod. 2. [Parliamentary Slang, Eng.] The rejection en masse, at the close of a parliamentary session, of undiscussed bills.

in-nom'i-nate, 1 in-nom'i-nit; 2 in-nŏm'i-nat, a. 1. Without specific name: said, in anatomy, of several structures left unnamed by the older authors; as, the innominate bone. 2. Without a name; anonymous. [< LL. innominatus, < L. in-, not; and see NOMINATE.]

—innominate artery, a large but short trunk springing from the arch of the aorta near the heart. It divides into trunks for supplying the right side of the head and the right arm. See under ARTERY.—l. bone, a large, irregular bone resulting from the concrescence of three primitive bones forming one of the sides of the pelvis in man and the hip bone haunch-bone; huckle-bone. The ilium, ischium, and pubis, composing it, are united into one structure in the adult, and in the child are separated by a cartilaginous l. cartilage (Rom. Law), a contract without distinct classification or a specific name. The term was applied to those contracts for which no precise remedy was provided or appointed, save a general action on the case. The consideration they contained is usually expressed in the formulas (1) Do ut des if give that you may give), in which something was given by one party as a consideration for something given by another. (2) Do ut facias (I give that you may do something), in which one party agrees to give money in consideration of work to be performed by another. (3) Facio ut des (I do something that you may give), in which one party agrees to perform a work for a sum either stated or left to the determination of the law. (4) Facio ut facias (I do something that you may do something in exchange), as when two persons agree to marry or do any positive act on both sides.—l. veins, large trunks formed by the union of the veins from the head and arm.

in-nom"i-na'tum, 1 in-nom'i-nē'tum; 2 in-nŏm'i-nā'tŭm, n. [-TA, pl.] [LL.] 1. Anat. The innominate bone. 2. Something that never has been named, or the use of which is not known: employed in cataloging antique articles, etc.

in'no-vate, 1 in'o-vēt; 2 in'o-vāt, v. [-VAT'ED; -VAT'ING.] I. i. 1. To make changes or alterations in anything established; make innovations: often with in, on, or upon; as, to innovate upon religious forms. 2. To introduce or strive to introduce new things.

There is not a remark deducible from the history of mankind, more important than that advanced by Mr. Burke, that 'to innovate is not to reform.'
STORY in Am. Oratory, Aug. 31, 1826 p. 517. [C. n. & B. 1853.]

II. t. 1. To introduce as new: bring in as an innovation. 2. To change by bringing in something new.

If all attempts to innovate the constitutional or habitual character have really proceeded from public spirit, and love of others, the world has hitherto been sufficiently unrascible.
JOHNSON Rambler Dec. 3, 1751.

in'no-va'tion, 1 in'o-vē'shŭn; 2 in'o-vā'shon, n. 1. The act of innovating or making a change in something established; introduction of something new. 2. A change in customs, rites, or recognized principles; a novelty in method or manner.

The thought and the innovation, in 1776, that a woman should be permitted to hold real estate in her own right.
T. W. HIGGINSON in North American Review Nov. 1879, p. 421.

3. Scots Law. The exchange and substitution of one obligation for another. Compare NOVATION. 4. Bot. In mosses, a new shoot or supplementary extension of the stem.

There is formed every year, after the fruit has reached maturity a side shoot called an 'innovation,' which acts in the same way as the main stem, and at a later period becomes an independent plant.
K. G. GOEBEL in Encyc. Brit. 9th ed., vol. xvii, p. 75.

5†. An insurrection; revolution. [< LL. innovation(n-), < L. innovo; see INNOVATE.] —in"no-va'tion-al, a. [Rare.] Tending to innovations.—in"no-va'tion-ist, n. One who believes in or practises innovation.—in'no-va'tive, a. Characterized by or tending to introduce innovations.

Seek ye Me and ye shall live. . . . The Prophet uses the two imperatives, inoneing both, man's duty and his reward.
E. B. PUSEY Minor Prophets, Amos v. 4, p. 191. [s. 1877.]

in'o-pe'tic, 1 in'o-pek'tik; 2 in'o-pĕk'tik, a. Pertaining to inopexia.

in-op'er-a-bl(e), 1 in-op'er-a-bl; 2 in-ŏp'er-a-bl, a. [Rare.] Incapable of being operated on; as, an inoperable tumor.

in-op'er-cu-late, 1 in-op'er-kyu-lit; 2 in-ŏp'er-kyu-lĭt, a.

in-op'er-a-tive*, } Lacking in operation or effect; desti-in-op'er-ose*, } tute of result; ineffectual; as, inoperative plans.

in"op'er-cu-la'ta, 1 in'o-pėr'kyu-lē'ta; 2 in'o-pĕr'kyū-lā'ta, n. pl. Zoöl. The Monotocardia (q. v.). ANT: section of a group having inoperculate families. [< IN-² + L. operculatus: see OPERCULATE.]

in-op'er-cu-late, 1 in'o-pėr'kyu-lit; 2 in'o-pĕr'kyu-lat, a. 1. Lacking an operculum, as a snail. 2. Of or pertaining to the Inoperculata. 3. Bot. Having no operculum or lid. in'o-per'cu-lar, } in'o-per'cu-lous, } a.

in'o-pex'i-a, 1 in'o-peks'i-a; 2 in'o-pĕks'i-a, n. Pathol. Increased coagulability of the blood.

in'op'i-nate†, a. Unthought of, or unexpected. in'o-pine', in'op'por-tune', } 1 in-op'er-tūn'; 2 in-ŏp'or-tūn', a.

Unseasonable or inappropriate; unsuitable or inconvenient, especially as to time; not opportune; as, an inopportune meeting. [< L. inopportunus, < in- not; and see OPPORTUNE.] Syn.: see AMISS.—in-op'por-tune'ly, adv. In an inopportune manner.—in'op-por-tune'ness, n.

in-op'por-tun'ist, 1 in-op'er-tūn'ist; 2 in-ŏp'or-tūn'ĭst, n. One who dissents from or opposes a policy as being inopportune; specif. [U.], one opposed, on this ground, to the declaration of papal infallibility by the Vatican Council in 1870.

in-op"por-tu'ni-ty, n. [Rare.] Unseasonableness; inappropriateness; inconvenience, as of time.
in-op'u-lent, in-or'nate, etc. See IN-3.
in-orb', 1 in-ôrb'; 2 in-ôrb', vt. To encircle or as in an orb; encircle, form into an orb.—in-orbed', a.
in-or'di-na-cy, 1 in-ôr'di-nə-sē; 2 in-ôr'di-na-cy, n. The state of being inordinate; excess beyond that which is reasonable or right; immoderateness.
in-or'di-nate, 1 in-ôr'di-nıt; 2 in-ôr'di-nat, a. 1. Not restricted or restrained by prescribed rules or bounds, or considerations of right or reason; immoderate; excessive; as, inordinate love of gold; inordinate ambition.

Uranus's ambition was inordinate, and he was jealous of every man of ability. KEIGHTLEY Greece pt. iii, p. 466. [n. s. & c.]

2. Lacking order or regularity; not controlled or regulated. [< L. inordinatus, < in-, not; and see ORDINATE.]
Syn.: see IMMODERATE; IRREGULAR.—inordinate proportion (Math.), proportion in which the order of statement is irregular.—in-or'di-nate-ness, n.
in"or-ga'ic, 1 in"ər-gan'ik; 2 in"ôr-gān'ic, a. 1. Devoid of organized physical structure; not being or having been a living organism; not organic; as, minerals are inorganic.

Ehrenberg has shown that the harbor of Wismar . . . is filling, not in consequence of the accumulation of inorganic sediments, but by the rapid increase . . . of innumerable animalcules. AGASSIZ in MRS. AGASSIZ'S Louis Agassiz vol. ii. p. 650. [n. s. & co. 1886.]

2. Not the result of living or organic processes; as inorganic fluid. 3. Philol. Originating without design or order; abnormally or irregularly developed; as, the declension of the verb "to be" is inorganic. 4. Designating a brand of chemistry that treats of substances other than those found in the organic. 5. Not furnished with bodily organs. in"or-gan'i-cal-ly.
—inorganic chemistry, see CHEMISTRY.—in"or-gan'i-cal-ness, n.
in-or'gan-ism, n. [Rare.] Lack of organization; absence of organic structure.
in"or-gan'ı-ty†, n. The state or quality of being inorganic.
in-or'gan-iz"a-bl(ē", a. That can not be organized; not organizable. in-or'gan-iz"a-bil(ē"ı-, in-or"gan-i-za'tion or -sa'tion, n.—in-or'gan-ized or -ised, a.
in-or"ga-no-gra'phy, n. The supposed descriptive of inorganic bodies. [< INORGANIC + -GRAPHY.]
in"o-rig'i-nate, a. Having no beginning; without origin: said of God.

Heaven is . . . inoriginate. Patrick Henry p. 369. [p. & c.]

in"or-thog'ra-phy†, n. Misspelling.
in-os'ate, 1 in-os'ēt; 2 in-ōs'ēt, n. A salt of inosic acid.
in"o-scle-ro'ma, 1 in"o-skli-rō'mə; 2 in"o-scle-rō'ma, n. Pathol. Hardened fibrous tissue.
in"o-scle-ro'sis, 1 in"o-skli-rō'sis; 2 in"o-scle-rō'sis, n. Pathol. The morbid thickening and hardening of fibrous tissue: fibrous sclerosis. [< Gr. is (in-), fiber, + sklērōsis, a hardening.]
in-os'co-py, 1 in-os'kō-pi; 2 in-ōs'e-o-py, n. Examination, as by digestion, of fibrous tissue of sputum, blood, sebacious, etc., as an aid to diagnosis.
in-os'cu-late, 1 in-os'kiu-lēt; 2 in-ōs'eū-lāt, v. [-LAT"ED; -LAT"ING.] I. t. To unite by contact of openings, as two vessels in an animal body.

They were still together, grew (For so they said themselves) inoculated.
BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER Princess iii, st. 4.

II. i. 1. To unite by means of small tubes; intercommunicate; anastomose, as two veins or arteries.

When supplying a Muscle, the axis-cylinder breaks up into very minute fibrilla, which seem to anastomose with each other.
CARPENTER Principles Mental Physiol. bk. i, p. 36. [A.]

2. To meet and blend together, as by continuity; intercommunicate; run together; as, the inosculating parts of a system.

There never yet was profound grief nor profound philosophy which did not inosculate at some point with profound religion.
DE QUINCEY Opium-Eater, Suspiria pt. i, p. 187. [r. & r. 1855.]

in-os"cu-la'tion, 1 in-os"kiu-lē'shən; 2 in-ōs"eū-lā'shon, n. 1. Union by tube-like passages; intercommunication, as of animal or vegetable veins, vessels, or filaments; anastomosis. 2. Union that implies continuity; as, the inosculation of faith and religion.
in-os'ic, 1 in-os'ik; 2 in-ōs'ic, a. Of, pertaining to, or derived from muscle. inosic acid, $HC_6H_{11}O_6$.
in"o-sin'ic-al, 1 in"o-sin'i-kəl; 2 in"o-sin'ic-al, a. Inosic.
in"o-sin'i-ta, 1 in"o-sin'i-tə; 2 in"o-sin'i-ta, n. Inosite.
in-os'ite, 1 in'o-sait, -sin; 2 in'o-sit, -sin, n. Chem. A crystalline sugar, ( )inu sucrose, $C_6H_{12}O_6$, isomeric with glucose, but without rotatory power, found in certain animal organs, as the muscular substance of the heart, and in some plants, as in roots and fruit. Also, INOSIN.]
in"o-su'ri-a, 1 in"o-siū'ri-ə; 2 in"o-sū'ri-a, n. Pathol. The occurrence in the urine of muscle-sugar or inosite. [< INOSITE + -URIA.]
in"u-lag'ma, 1 in"o-tag'mə; 2 in"o-tāg'ma, n. Biol. One of the assumed ultimate particles which enter into the composition of living protoplasm.
in"o-trop'ic, 1 in"o-trop'ik; 2 in"o-trōp'ic, a. Lessening the contractility of the muscles.—i-not'ro-pism, n.
i-nought', a., n., & adv. Enough.

1. [I-] R. C. Ch. Hist. A court or tribunal for examination and punishment of heretics.

It came into being as a part of ecclesiastical criminal law in 1231, and its judges were generally chosen from among members of the Dominican order. Torture, as a means of eliciting evidence, was first authorized by Innocent IV., in the Bull Ad exstirpanda, May 15, 1252, which was confirmed by succeeding popes. When found guilty and contumacious the culprit was handed over to the secular arm so that sentence might be executed. The chief scene of its activity was central and southern Europe; its sole appearance in England was on the occasion of the trials of the Templars (suppressed, 1308). It was introduced into Spain in 1237, but the Spanish Inquisition, of which the Dominican Torquemada was the most notable Grand Inquisitor, began with Ferdinand and Isabella in 1478, and was abolished in 1820. In 1538 there were Inquisitors in the Mexico, Lima, and Cartagena in the New World. In connection with the Inquisition Paul III. established the Holy Office in Rome in 1542, a congregation of cardinals to which presided over by the Pope and forming a court of appeal, which meets every Thursday. Its duties are now confined to dealing with heretical books and opinions, and to the application of canonical punishment. Compare AUTO DA FÉ.

I became, not inquisitive, but reasonably desirous to know by what strange hap . . . a clever . . . woman could have settled . . . in this lonely inn. BLACKMORE Lorna Doone vol. i, ch. 1. [L.]

2. Inclined to the pursuit of knowledge; addicted to investigation or research.

His was an anxiously inquisitive mind, a scrupulously conscientious heart. COLEMAN in Dean Stanley's Thomas Arnold vol. i, p. 33. [v. & r. 1870.]

Syn.: curious, inquiring, interrogative, meddlesome, meddling, peeping, prying, scrutinizing, searching. An inquisitive person is one who is bent on finding out all that can be found out by inquiry, especially of little and personal matters, and hence is generally meddlesome and prying. Inquisitive may be used in a good sense, the in such connection inquiring is to be preferred; as, an inquiring mind. As applied to a state of mind, curious denotes a vain, idle, and unimportant desire to know fully something to which one's attention has been called, but without the active tendency that inquisitive implies; a well-directed curiosity is a virtue; one with it will not be inquisitive in trying to ascertain, what is of interest in the affairs of another.—Ant.: apathetic, careless, heedless, insensitive, indifferent, unconcerned, uninterested.—Prep.: about, concerning, in regard to, regarding.—in-quis'i-tiv-ly*, adv.—in-quis'i-tiv(e-ness*, n.

Sixtus the Fourth . . . readily complied with the petition of the sovereigns, and expedited a bull bearing date November 1st, 1478, authorizing them to appoint two or three ecclesiastics, inquisitors for the detection and suppression of heresy throughout their dominions.
PRESCOTT Ferdinand and Isabella vol. i, p. 249. [n. 1840.]

3. [Rare.] An inquisitive person. [L., e. inquisitus; see INQUISITION.]—Grand Inquisitor or I.-general (R. C. Ch.), the president of the supreme council, which had jurisdiction over local courts of the Inquisition.
inquis"i-to'ri-al, 1 in-kwiz'i-tō'ri-əl; 2 in-kwīs'ı-tō'ri-al, a. 1. After the manner of an inquisitor; disposed to ask offensive or cruel questions; searching; prying. 2. Pertaining to a court of inquisition or to an inquisitor or his duties. 3. Law. Pertaining to a system of criminal procedure in which the proceedings are conducted secretly and the judge acts also as prosecutor; opposed to accusatory or accusatorial. in-quis'i-to-ry† [Rare].—in-quis'i-to'ri-al-ly, adv.—inquis'i-to'ri-al-ness, n.
in-quis'i-to-ri-ous†, a. Inquisitorial.
in-quis't-tress, n. [Rare.] An offensively inquisitive woman; a female inquisitor. in-quis'i-trix.
in-quis"i-tu'ri-en††, a. Given to undue inquiry.
in-raced', 1 in-rēst'; 2 in-rāct', a. Her. Notched or serrated; indented. [< IN-1 + race, form of RAZE?, v.] in-rac'i-nate, 1 in-ras'i-nēt; 2 in-rās'i-nāte, vt. [-NAT"ED; -NAT"ING.] To root; implant. [< F. inraciner, < in- (< L. in), in + racine, < L. radix (radic-), root.] in"ra'di-us, n. The radius of an inscribed circle.
in-rage', vt. To enrage.
in re, 1 in ri; 2 in rē. [IN RE'BUS, pl.] [L.] In the case or matter of: a legal phrase; as, in re Smith vs. Jones.
in-read'y, 1 in-red'i; 2 in-rēd'y, adv. [Sc.] Even now; already.
in-reg'is-ter, vt. [Rare.] To enregister.
in rem, 1 in rem; 2 in rēm. [L.] Directed to a thing; related to property: opposed to in personam.
I. N. R. I., abbr. [L.] Jesus Nazarenus, Rex Judæorum (Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews).
in'rigged", 1 in'rigd"; 2 in'rīgd", pa. Having the rowlocks even with the rail: said of a boat, as distinguished from one that has rowlocks outrigged.

in'run″ning, n. The act or place of running in; an inlet.

in-rup'tion, n. [Rare.] Same as IRRUPTION.

in-rush', 1 in-rʊsh'; 2 ĭn-rŭsh', vt. To rush in.

in'rush″, n. A rushing in, as by a sudden movement or flow; an invasion; as, the inrush of a flood.

ins., abbr. Inspector; insurance; inches; inscribed (Stock Ex[change).

In-sab″ba-ta'ti, 1 in-sab″ə-tē'tai; 2 ĭn-săb″a-tä'tī, n. pl. The Waldenses: so named from their peculiar sabots. [< LL. Insabatati, < L. in, in, + F. sabot, wooden shoe.]

in-sack', 1 in-sak'; 2 ĭn-săk', vt. To put into a sack.

in″sa-gac'i-ty, n. See IN-².

in-sal'i-vate, 1 in-sal'ɪ-vēt; 2 ĭn-săl'i-vāt, vt. [-VAT″ED; -VAT″ING.] To mix with saliva — as food, in eating.— in-sal″i-va'tion, n.

in″sa-lu'bri-ous, in″sa-lu'bri-ty, etc. See IN-².

in-sal'u-ta-ry, 1 in-sal'yu-tē-rɪ; 2 ĭn-săl'yụ-tā-ry, a. 1. Not favorable to health; unwholesome. 2. Not tending to safety; productive of danger or injury. [< LL. insalutaris, < L. in-, not; and see SALUTARY.]

in-salv'a-bl(eᴾ, a. [Rare.] That can not be healed; incurable; remediless.— in-salv″a-bil'i-ty, n.

in-san'a-bl(eᴾ, 1 in-san'ə-bl; 2 ĭn-săn'a-bl, a. That can not be healed; incurable; as, an insanable disease. [< L. insanabilis, < in-, not; and see SANABLE.] — in-san″a-bil'i-ty, n.— in-san'a-bl(e-nessᴾ, n.— in-san'a-bly, adv.

in-sane', 1 in-sēn'; 2 ĭn-sān', a. 1. Not sane; exhibiting symptoms of mental unsoundness; mentally deranged; also, characteristic of those thus deranged; hence, irrational; insensate; crazy; as, an insane person; an insane purpose.

In the plural phrase 'the insane' the word signifies those who have been legally recognized as mentally deranged and are supposed to be under care and restraint as such.

In every sane hour the service of thought appears reasonable, the despotism of the senses insane. EMERSON Nature, Addresses and Lectures, Literary Ethics p. 153. [H. M. & CO. 1889.]

2. Used or set apart for the insane; as, an insane asylum; an insane ward. 3†. Causing insanity. [< L. insanus, < in-, not, + sanus, sound.]

Syn.: absurd, cracked, crazed, crazy, delirious, demented, deranged, distracted, frantic, frenzied, irrational, lunatic, mad, maniac, maniacal, monomaniac, out of one's head, mind, senses, or wits, wandering, wild. Crazed and crazy are popular words (identical in meaning with the colloquial cracked) to denote what is preferably expressed by insane in literary, medical, and legal use. Compare synonyms for INSANITY.— Ant.: clear, collected, level-headed, sage, sane, sensible, sober, sound, wise.— in-sane'-root″, n. A herb formerly believed to cause insanity; probably the black henbane.— in-sane'ly, adv.— in-sane'ness, n.

in-sa'nie†, n. Insanity.

in-san'i-fy, vt. [Rare.] To make insane; madden.

in-san'i-ta-ry, a. Not sanitary; prejudicial to health; likely to cause disease.— in-san'i-ta-ri-ness, n.

in-san″i-ta'tion, n. [Rare.] An unwholesome condition; deficiency in sanitary arrangements.

in-san'i-ty, 1 in-san'ɪ-tɪ; 2 ĭn-săn'i-ty, n. 1. Pathol. A persistent morbid condition of mind usually connected with some abnormal or diseased condition of the brain or nervous system, and characterized by deficiency of volitional and rational control, by disordered activity of the fantasy, and in general by perverted action of one or more of the mental faculties. It may, or may not, be developed on a basis of heredity. The principal forms are delusional insanity, dementia, mania, melancholia, and paranoia. Compare MANIA; MONOMANIA.

All power of fancy over reason is a degree of insanity.
JOHNSON Rasselas p. 139. [S. M. 1880.]

While the symptoms of insanity admit of an indefinite number of degrees and complications, and the differing types and kinds are apt to shade into each other or be intermixed, those given in the phrases below may be distinguished.

2. Law. A deranged mental condition such as deprives a person of the capacity to comprehend the nature and consequences of a particular act.

The question of insanity relates largely to crime, to contracts, and to personal liberty. When mental derangement is but temporary or transient it is more properly called delirium; as, delirium of fever, of intoxication; it is termed insanity when the deranged or perverted condition is continuous or persistent. From the inception of the common law criminal responsibility could not attach in cases where the accused was incapable of forming a guilty or criminal intent. The rule is that when a person is suffering from an insane hallucination, while rational on other subjects, he is not responsible criminally for acts committed while under the influence of the hallucination when the facts imagined by him would, if actually existing, in any manner justify the act. In 1843, in reply to questions put by the House of Lords in the trial of the McNaghten case, the law as pronounced by Chief Justice Tindal was that every man is to be presumed to be sane and to possess a sufficient degree of reason to be responsible for his crimes until the contrary be proved; and that to establish a defense on the ground of insanity it must be clearly proved that, at the time of the committing of the act, the party accused was laboring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or if he did know it, that he did not know he was doing what was wrong (Clark & Finlayson, vol. x, p. 200). This ruling has been followed generally in England and the United States, but in some jurisdictions the test of responsibility for criminal acts, where insanity is stated to exist, is the capacity of the defendant to discriminate between right and wrong at the time of commission and with respect to the act which is the subject of inquiry. This excludes the defense of "moral insanity," in which the subject knows abstractly what is right but can not choose it, and what is wrong but can not shun it, as in pyromania, kleptomania, etc. This form of insanity has, however, been recognized in recent decisions of at least eight States as a sound defense in law. A less degree of mental incapacity will absolve from a contract than that which will exonerate from crime.

3. Lack of sound sense; extreme folly. [< L. insanita(t-)s, < insanus; see INSANE.]

Syn.: aberration, alienation, craziness, delirium, dementia, derangement, frenzy, hallucination, lunacy, madness, mania, monomania. Of these terms insanity is the most exact and comprehensive, including in its widest sense all morbid conditions of mind, but being in its more frequent restricted use applied to those forms in which the mental disorder is persistent, as distinguished from those in which it is temporary or transient. Craziness is a vague popular term for any sort of disordered mental action, or for conduct suggesting it. Lunacy originally denoted intermittent insanity, supposed to be dependent on the changes of the moon (L. luna); the term is now applied in general and legal use to any form of mental unsoundness except idiocy. Madness is the old popular term, now less common, for insanity in its widest sense, but with suggestion of excitement, akin to mania. In the derived sense, lunacy denotes what is insanely foolish, madness what is insanely desperate. Derangement is a common euphemism for insanity. Delirium is always temporary, and is specifically the insanity of disease, as in acute fevers. Dementia is a general weakening of the mental powers; the word is specifically applied to senile insanity, dotage. Aberration is eccentricity of mental action due to an abnormal state of the perceptive faculties, and is manifested by error in perceptions and rambling thought. Hallucination is the apparent perception of that which does not exist or is not present to the senses, as the seeing of specters or of reptiles in delirium tremens. Monomania is mental derangement which manifests itself as confined to one subject or object, but which must, on account of its diseased character, be distinguished from an idiosyncrasy. Frenzy and mania are forms of raving and furious insanity. Compare synonyms for IDIOCY.— Ant.: clearness, good sense, lucidity, rationality, sanity.— adolescent insanity, same as DEMENTIA PRÆCOX. — alternating i., insanity in which an emotional state of one extreme type alternates with one of a diametrically opposite character, as, e. g., mania with melancholia. circular i.‡.— anticipatory i., inherited insanity which develops at an earlier age in the second generation than in the first.— compulsive i., insanity in which the victim is entirely controlled by obsessions.— confusional i., acute temporary insanity with confusion of ideas, incoherence, delirium, etc., following severe disease or shock. — delusional i., insanity marked by delusions and hallucinations, the patient often believing himself to be persecuted.— hysterical i., insanity accompanied by emotional paroxysms resembling those of hysteria.— manic-depressive i., insanity in which maniacal and depressive conditions coexist, without deterioration, appearing sometimes simultaneously, sometimes successively, occasionally with a lucid interval.— simultaneous i., the development of insanity at the same time in two persons who are closely associated.— toxic i., insanity due to the action of some poison.

in-sa'pi-en-cy, etc. See IN-².

in-sa'ti-a-bl(eᴾ, 1 in-sē'shɪ-ə-bl; 2 ĭn-sā'shi-a-bl (XIII), a. Not satiable; not to be sated or satisfied; that desires or craves immoderately or unappeasably; as, insatiable ambition.

The desire of equality always becomes more insatiable in proportion as equality is more complete. DE TOCQUEVILLE Democracy in Am. tr. by Bowen, vol. ii, p. 166. [S. & F. 1863.]

in-sa'ti-ate, 1 in-sē'shɪ-ēt; 2 ĭn-sā'shi-āt (XIII), a. Not to be satiated or appeased; insatiable; as, an insatiate longing.

A love Unspeakable, the ardor of a hope Boundless, insatiate.
EDWIN ARNOLD Light of Asia bk. iii, st. 34.

in-seal'†, vt. To enseal. in-sell'†.

in-seam', 1 in-sīm'; 2 ĭn-sēm', vt. To impress or mark with or as with a seam; enseam.

in-sec'a-bl(eᴾ, 1 in-sek'ə-bl; 2 ĭn-sĕc'a-bl, a. [Rare.] That can not be cut with a knife; indivisible. [< L. insecabilis, < in-, not, + secabilis, that may be cut, < seco, cut.]

in'sect, 1 in'sekt; 2 ĭn'sĕct, n. 1. One of the Insecta; especially, a hexapod or six-legged arthropod.

Insect.
Mouth-parts of a cockroach (Blatta orientalis): lbr, labrum (upper lip); md, mandible; ma, ma, anterior pair of maxillæ; mp, posterior pair of maxillæ, lower lip (labium); st, stipes (stem); m, mentum; sm, submentum: mi, mi, me, me, mala interna and externa, inner and outer ridges of the 1st and 2d pairs of maxillæ; pm, maxillary palpus, feeler of the anterior maxillæ; pl, labial palpus, feeler of the posterior maxillæ. (After Savigny.)

The typical insects or hexapods have the body divided into a head, a thorax of 3 segments, each of which bears a pair of limbs, and an abdomen of 10 segments, and pass through a more or less complete metamorphosis. There are usually 2 pairs of wings, sometimes one pair or none. Insects are by far the most numerous class of animals, about 300,000 species having been named in science, while entomologists suppose five times as many more remain to be described. They are most numerous in warm and moist regions, decreasing toward the poles. The greater number live wholly upon land; but a large proportion are aquatic in fresh water, at least when young, and a few inhabit the ocean and salt seas. They appear in geological history with the dawn of plant-life on the earth, the oldest being generalized orthopterous and neuropterous forms recovered from the Devonian. Flies (Diptera), butterflies and moths (Lepidoptera), and ants, bees, and wasps (Hymenoptera) are little known before the Tertiary age, coinciding in their advent with the development of flowering plants. Insects are mainly vegetarian, but some groups subsist by the chase, blood-sucking, or devouring carrion, and many lowly forms are parasitic. The cultivation of cereal crops, vegetables, and fruits has so increased the food-supply of the insects feeding upon the plants and trees cultivated that these species have enormously multiplied in civilized regions; and at the same time the means of dispersion afforded by ships and commerce have enabled the noxious species of one continent or country to spread to others. Hence enormous damage is caused in agriculture, horticulture, and forestry, and the suppression of insect pests has become one of the most important subjects of scientific investigation and governmental care. Still more important, perhaps, is the fact that many insects, especially among the flies, mosquitoes, fleas, and the like, carry, or nurture and disseminate, microbes of disease, communicating plague, various fevers, and other diseases fatal or distressing to man or his domestic animals. On the other hand, a large number of insects are of economic value for their products, as in the case of the silkworm-moth, the bees, etc.; for their assistance in contending with injurious species, as in the case of the parasitic and predaceous kinds; or as scavengers. Compare illus. under COLEOPTERA; CRUSTACEA.

2. Originally, any small invertebrate apparently cut into segments, as various arachnids and crustaceans in addition to true insects. 3. Some other small invertebrate, as a coral-animal. 4. Figuratively, a contemptible, despicable person. [< L. insectum, orig. neut. of insectus, pp. of inseco, cut into, < in, in, + seco, cut.] — insect bed (Geol.), a stratum abounding in fossil remains of insects; as, the Florissant beds in Colorado.— in'sect-box″, n. An entomologist's collecting-box.— i.-flowers, n. pl. Flowers used for making insect-powder.— i.-fungi, n. pl. Fungi parasitic on insects, such as those included in the genera Empusa and Corticepæ.—1. gun, n. A bellows-like instrument for blowing insect-powder into the crevices of walls and furniture or on the leaves of plants.—1. dime, n. An oily, sticky mixture put on tree-trunks, to guard against climbing caterpillars, etc.—L. net, n. A landing-net for catching insects.—1. powder, n. A powder used for killing insects, commonly made from the dried flowers of certain species of Chrysanthemum which grow in Persia, in Dalmatia and neighboring lands, and in California; buhach; Dalmatian or Persian insect-powder.—l. wax, n. Chinese wax. See under WAX.—lapi·i, n. Same as in·sec'te-an, a. Of or pertaining to insects. in'sec-tan†; in'sec-tine†.—in·sec'ti-form, a. Having the appearance of an insect.—in'sec-tif(e§, a. Of, pertaining to, or like an insect. n. Infected with insects.

In·sec'ta, 1 in·sek'tə; 2 ĭn·sĕk'tə, n. pl. Entom. A class of arthropods, especially those having tubular trachea opening by stigmata for respiration, a distinct head, and one pair of antennæ, thus including the hexapods and the myriapodous chilopods and diplopods as subclasses: often restricted to the hexapods or typical insects.

Linnæus had seven orders of insects: Aptera, Neuroptera, Hemiptera, Coleoptera, Lepidoptera, Diptera, and Hymenoptera. The last four orders have remained nearly the same in all classifications proposed since 1758. The Orthoptera were soon separated from the Hemiptera, and have been retained as distinct by all. The Aptera were a very heterogeneous collection, embracing not only insects but all other arthropods, and were split into many groups, mostly separates from the insects, as crustaceans, arachnids, etc.; some were kept distinct, others were attached as suborders or families to other orders. The Neuroptera have been divided by Laporte, Brauer, Comstock, and several recent entomologists, but the number and scope of the divisions varies with each author. One division, the Trichoptera, meets with general approval.

Latreille, in his numerous works, had several classifications, but his most complete one (Cours d'Entomologie) was generally adopted by students of entomology for over fifty years. The arrangement of Brauer was perfected by Comstock, and is now largely used. Recently Börner and Handlirsch have given new classifications in many orders and numerous new names. The orders now adopted by most of the American entomologists are given in the third column of the appended collocations of their relations to the orders of previous entomologists.

in'stinct, 1 in'stiŋkt; 2 in'stiŋct, n. 1. A natural spontaneous impulse or propensity, in the lower animals or in man, moving them without reasoning toward actions essential to their existence, preservation, and development; as, the instinct of self-preservation. Reactions that are merely reflex or automatic, in the psychological meaning of these words, are not properly spoken of as instinctive. Instinct implies at least a low degree of consciousness; but its reactions are not learned or directed by conscious process of reasoning. The following characteristics are, therefore, attributable to every form of instinct: (1) It is adaptive, or directed toward some end: (2) that end is somehow connected with the welfare of the species or of the individual as a member of the species; (3) the reaction is psychophysically complex; and (4) it is native or inherited and not learned. No other animal is so full of instincts as man.

Although reason may . . . in varying degrees be blended with instinct, the distinction between the two is sufficiently precise: reason, in whatever degree present, only acts upon a definite and often laboriously acquired knowledge of the relation between means and ends.

G. J. ROMANES in Encyc. Brit. 9th ed., vol. xiii, p. 157.

2. A natural or acquired aptitude or tendency; a sense of what is fitting, whether natural or acquired; also, the sum of inherited habits; as, the dramatic instinct; an instinct for order. [< L. instinctus, impulse, < instinctus, pp.: see INSTINCT, a.] in'stream'ing, 1 in'strĭm'ĭng; 2 In'strēm'ing, n. A streaming in; influx; access.

in-strengthen, vt. [Rare.] To make strong inwardly.

in'stroke", 1 in'strōk'; 2 in'strōk', n. An inwardly directed stroke.

instruct', 1 in-struk't; 2 In-struct', vt. 1. To impart knowledge or skill to, especially by systematic method; tell what to believe or how or what to do; teach; educate; inform; as, to instruct a child.

Then and Enchad would learn that an instructed democracy is the surest foundation of government. J. BRIGHT Speech on Am. Question, Nov. 24, 1863 p. 260. [L. n. & co. 1865.]

2. To furnish with specific matters; give orders or directions to; command; as, to instruct a servant or an agent.

3. Eng. Law. To furnish information as a client to a solicitor, as a solicitor to counsel, as a judge to a jury; authorize one to act as advocate; brief. 4. Scots Law. To confirm by evidence in writing; verify; as, to instruct in order; prepare; form. [< L. instructus, pp. of instruo, < in, in, + struo, build.] SYN.: see DRILL; EDUCATE; INFORM.— ANT.: see synonyms for CONFUSE.

in-structed-ly, adv.—in-struct'ed-ness, n.—in-struct'i-ble(-ness), a. Capable of receiving instruction.

in-struct'ing, 1 in-struk'shon; 2 in-struc'shon, n. 1. The act of instructing; teaching; as, the instruction of youth.

To teach those branches which train the intellect alone is instruction, but to teach those same branches . . . is MACAULAY Education and Manual Industry p. 333. [L. 1888.]

2. Imparted knowledge; precept. 3. The act of giving specific directions or commands, or the directions given; as, instruction to an agent.

By instruction of a representative we understand, in the politics of representative governments, his being directed by his constituents, authoritatively, to vote on a certain question yet pending, in a manner pointed out to him.

F. LIEBER Political Ethics vol. ii, p. 207. [L. 1880.]

4. pl. Eng. Law. Directions given to solicitor or counsel. [< L. instructio(n-), < instruo; see INSTRUCT.]

SYN.: see ORDER.— in-struc'tion-car", n. A car used on railroads for the instruction of the employees in the performance of the technical part of their duties.

in-struc'tion-al, 1 in-struk'shŏn-al; 2 in-struc'shon-al, a. Pertaining or relating to instruction; educational; didactic.

This paragraph is quoted here for the express purpose of criticism, notwithstanding the fact that its criticiser would advocate an entirely different method in many ordinary matters of writing.

F. H. TEALL Compounding of Eng. Words p. 40. [l. r. 1891.]

In-struc'tion-a-ry, 1 in-struk'shon-ĕ-ri; 2 in-struc'shon-ā-ry, n. Instruction; didactic or illustrative matter.

in-struc'tive, 1 in-struk'tĭv; 2 in-struc'tiv, a. Fitted to

in-struc'tive(-ly), adv.—in-struc'tiv(e)ness, n. 1.

in-struc'tor, 1 in-struk'tor or -ter; 2 in-struc'tor, n. One who instructs; a teacher.

The office of instructor ought to rank and be recompensed as one of the most honorable. CHANNING Works, Self-Culture p. 31. [A. v. A. 1883.]

2. Specif., in American colleges, a teacher of lower rank than a professor, sometimes, a teacher next to a tutor, in the college faculty. [L., < instructus; see INSTRUCT.]

in-struct'ress, in-struc'tor-ship, n.

in'strument, 1 in'stru-ment or -mĕnt; 2 In'strŭ-ment, vt. 1. Law. (1) To draft as an instrument. (2) To petition by instrument; to address an instrument to. 2. Music. To furnish with instruments, as a composition.

in-stru'ment, n. 1. A means by which work is done; an implement or tool, especially an implement or mechanism for scientific or professional purposes, as distinguished from one for mere labor; a means for effecting use; figuratively, any means of accomplishment; as, the hands are instruments of the will. 2. A mechanical contrivance for the production of musical sounds.

Musical instruments may be divided into 1. stringed instruments, in which the sound is due to the vibration of a string or wire, usually reinforced by the resonance of a soundingboard or the like, including (a) the viol class, where the string is vibrated by a bow, as in the violin, violoncello, and bass viol, (b) the guitar class, where it is vibrated by plucking, as in the guitar, banjo, zither, and mandolin, and (c) the pianoforte, whose strings are vibrated by percussion; (2) wind-instruments, in which the sound is due to the vibration of a column of air, including (a) the reed class, where the vibration is induced by a reed as in the oboe and clarinet, and many organ-pipes, and (b) the class where the vibration is induced by a fluttering current or jet of air, as in horns, including the trumpet, cornet, trombone, and most of the brass instruments, and in the flue-pipe of the organ, whose simplest type is the common whistle: (3) percussive instruments, used now chiefly for accentuation, as the drum and cymbals, for signals, as the bell, or as curiosities, as the xylophone. An exception is the pianoforte, which is both stringed and percussive. A different mode of division is into (1) instruments of fixed intonation, where only certain tones can be produced, as the pianoforte, organ, flute, and guitar: (2) harmonic instruments, giving only the harmonics of one fundamental, as the French horn; and (3) instruments of free intonation, giving any tone within limits, as any of the viol class. See the names of the different instruments, and ORCHESTRA.

3. A person used to execute the will of another; an agent.

Men who have sacrificed their own selves to become the paid instruments of a system.

FROUDE Nemesis of Faith p. 7. [n. m. r. 1870.]

4. Law. A writing acknowledging or certifying to a claim, or recording the terms of a contract, deed, or grant.

Where the language of an instrument has a settled legal meaning, its construction is not open to evidence.

PARSONS Contracts vol. ii, p. 33. [L. n. & co. 1860.]

5. Scots Law. Any record drawn by a notary public. 6†. Any part of the body having a special function; an organ of the body. [F., < L. instrumentum, < instruo; see INSTRUCT.]

SYN.: see AGENT; APPLIANCE.— differential instrument (Elec.), an instrument, such as a galvanometer, in which the difference between two currents passing in opposite directions through two circuits or coils is measured by their effect upon the needle.— I. of Government (Eng. Hist.), the Constitution of December 16, 1653, for the Protectorate in England, which remained in force until Parliament drew up the Humble Petition. See HUMBLE PETITION, under HUMBLE. — in'stru-ment-shel"ter, n. [U. S.] Meteor. A thermometer-screen.— negotiable instruments (Com.), instruments transferable by indorsement or delivery, entitling the holder to recover at law the property, etc., secured thereby, as bills of lading and the like.— Pravaz I., a species of hypodermic syringe.— tensile I., same as STRINGED INSTRUMENT. — time-sense I., a mechanism used by psychologists, for measuring judgments of time.— vowel I., an instrument used in acoustics to record and reproduce the vowel sounds.

In"strŭ-men-tal', 1 in'strŭ-men'tal; 2 In'strŭ-mĕn'tal, a. 1. Serving as a means or instrument; serviceable; helpful; as, instrumental in promoting an object. 2. Mus. Produced by or fitted for instruments. 3. Gram. Indicating the means or instrument; as, an instrumental case, i. e., that case of an inflected noun which expresses the instrument or instrumental cause by which anything is done: rendered by by or with. It is a separate case in Sanskrit and some other languages, but its functions are performed in Latin by the ablative. In Anglo-Saxon by the dative.

The instrumental [denotes the relation] . . . expressed by with, or by—the idea of adjacency or accompaniment passing naturally into that of means, instrument, or cause.

W. D. WHITNEY Lang. and Study of Lang. p. 271. [s. 1874.]

4. Traceable to a mechanical instrument; as, the instrumental errors in an observation or measurement. 5†. Old Physiol. Organic. [< L. instrumentum; see INSTRUMENT.]— in"strŭ-men'tal, n. 1. Gram. The instrumental case. See INSTRUMENTAL, a., 3. 2†. A means; instrument.

3†. An organ of the body. [< L. instrumentum, + -AL.] Mus.

1. One who plays an instrument, as distinguished from a vocalist. 2. [Rare.] One who composes instrumental music.

in"strŭ-men-tal'i-ty, 1 in'strŭ-men-tal'i-ti; 2 In'strŭ-mĕn-tăl'i-ty, n. [-TIES, 1 -ti-z; 2 -tig, pl.] 1. The quality or condition of being instrumental; subordinate agency; as, to work through the instrumentality of another. 2. That which is instrumental or auxiliary.

The three great civilising instrumentalities of the age, moral, mental, and material, are, Christianity, the press, and steam.

STRONG Our Country p. 66. [n. & v. co.]

in"strŭ-men'tal-ly, 1 in'strŭ-men'tal-i; 2 In'strŭ-mĕn'-tal-y, adv. 1. By means of an instrument or agency; not immediately; as, to help one instrumentally. 2. With instruments of music; as, a song instrumentally accompanied.

In"strŭ-men'ta-ry, 1 in'strŭ-men'ta-ri; 2 In'strŭ-mĕn'ta-ry, a. [Rare.] 1. Instrumental. 2. Scots Law. Or pertaining to a legal instrument; as, instrumentary witnesses.

In"strŭ-men-ta'tion, 1 in'strŭ-men-tē'shŏn; 2 In'strŭ-mĕn-tā'shon, n. 1. Mus. (1) The act, process, or art of writing or arranging musical compositions for performance by instruments; orchestration. (2) The use or the method of using an instrument or various instruments, as for producing peculiar effects. 2. The act of using instruments of precision, as in surveying, observing, or the work done with them. 3. [Rare.] Instrumental means or aid; instrumentality; agency; means.

In'strŭ-ment-ist, 1 in'strŭ-ment-ist; 2 in'strŭ-mĕnt-ist, n. One who plays a musical instrument; an instrumentalist.

in-style†, vt. To style. [conquerable in"sub-du'a-bl(e), a. [Rare.] Impossible to subdue; unconquerable. [L. in-, 1 in'sŭb-dū'ă-bl; 2 In'sŭb-dûô'ă-bl, n. Lack or want of subjection; disregard of authority or control; insubordination.

in"sub-or'di-nate, a. Incapable of being submerged.

in"sub-mis'sion, etc. See IN- pref.

in"sub-or'di-nate, 1 in'sŭb-ôr'dĭ-nĭt; 2 In'sŭb-ôr'dĭ-nat, a. 1. Not subordinate or obedient; not submitting to authority; rebellious; unruly. 2. [Rare.] Not inferior in height; as, an insubordinate hill.— in"sub-or'di-nate-ly, adv.

In"sub-or'di-na'tion, 1 in'sŭb-ôr'dĭ-nā'shŏn; 2 In'sŭb-ôr'di-nā'shon, n. The state of being insubordinate; disobedience to constituted authorities; unruliness.

The Tlascalans were a fierce race, . . . and, from their insubordination, as terrible enemies to encounter.

PRESCOTT Mexico vol. iii, bk. vi, p. 33. [n. 1851.]

SYN.: see ANARCHY.

In"su-brēs, 1 in'sŭ-brĭz; 2 in'sŭ-brēs, n. pl. A Gallic people who settled in northern Italy in the 4th century B. C., whose chief town was Mediolanum (Milan). They were subdued by Rome, 196 B. C.

In"sub-stan'tial, 1 in'sŭb-stan'shal; 2 in'sŭb-stăn'shal, a. [Rare.] Unsubstantial; also, unreal; illusive.

The great globe itself,
Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve
And, like this insubstantial pageant faded, Leave not a rack behind.

SHAKESPEARE Tempest act iv, sc. 1.

[< LL. insubstantialis, < in-, not; and see SUBSTANTIAL.]

In"sub-stan'ti-al'i-ty, n. [Rare.] Unsubstantiality.

In"sub-stan'ti-ate, vt. To make insubstantial.

in"sub-stan'ti-at"ed, a. Enclosed with or in substance or matter; embodied.

in"sub-stan'ti-bl(e), a. [Rare.] Incapable of subversion.

In"suc-ca'tion†, n. Soaking; maceration.

in'suck-en, 1 in'sŭk-n; 2 in'sŭk-n, a. Feudal. Located or resident within the sucken, or legal boundaries of a mill.

in'sue-date†, a. Causing or accompanied by sweating.

in-sue', 1 in-sū'; 2 in-sû', v. To ensue.

in'sue-tude, 1 in'swē-tūd; 2 in'swe-tûd, n. [Rare.] The state or quality of being unused or unusual; absence or lack of use, custom, or habit; unusualness. [< L. insuetudo (insuetudin-), < in-, not, + suetus, pp. of suesco; see DESUETUDE.]

in"su-ffer-a-bl(e), 1 in-sŭf'er-ă-bl; 2 in-sŭf'er-ă-bl, a. Such as can not be suffered or endured; intolerable.

The cant of democracy upon the lips of men who are living down its principles, is, to an earnest mind well-nigh insufferable.

WHITTIER Prose Works vol. i, p. 394. [L. m. & co. 1882.]

in'suf-fi'cience, n. [Rare.] Insufficiency. [OF., < LL. insufficientia, < insufficien(t-)s: see INSUFFICIENT.]

in'suf-fi'cien-cy, 1 in'sə-fish'en-sı; 2 in'sə-fish'ən-cy, n. The state or quality of being insufficient; inadequacy, as in amount, value, power, or fitness; deficiency. See, insufficiency of health.

A monument of the insufficiency of human enjoyments.

in'suf-fi'sance†; in"su-fi'sant-nes†; -ancy†. See insufficiency (Pathol.), same as IMBALANCE.—pyloric i. (Pathol.), lack of closure of the pylorus causing the food to pass from the stomach in an undigested condition.—valvular i. (Pathol.), faulty closure of one of the heart-valves; characterized according to the valves affected as aortic, mitral, pulmonary, or tricuspid i.

in"suf-fi'cient, 1 in'sə-fish'ent; 2 in'sə-fish'ənt, a. Not sufficient; inadequate for some need, purpose, or use; lacking in needful amount, value, ability, mental or physical power, or fitness; incompetent; unfit; as, insufficient food; insufficient means. [OF., < LL. insufficien(t-)s, < in-, not; and see SUFFICIENT.] in"suf-fi'sant†.—in"suf-fi'cient-ly, adv.

in"suf-fi'cient-ism, 1 in"sə-fish'ent-ızm; 2 in"sə-fish'ənt-ızm, n. Med. The doctrine that holds drugs to be insufficient as a cure for disease and that relies on expectant treatment. See EXPECTANT, a., 2.—in-suf-fi'cient-ist, n.

in-suf'flate, 1 in-sə-flāt'; 2 in-sə-flāt', vt. [-PLAT-ED; -PLAT-ING.] 1. To blow or breathe into or upon; treat by insufflation; as, to insufflate an asphyxiated person. 2. Eccl. Hist. To breathe upon, as a religious ceremony; as, to insufflate a catechumen. [< LL. insufflatus, pp. of insuffla, blow.]

in'suf-fla'tion, 1 in'sə-flā'shən; 2 in'sə-flā'shən, n. 1. The act or process of blowing or breathing upon or into; as, the insufflation of liquids.

Winds which are propagated in the same direction from which they blow are called winds of insufflation.
H. SELLMAN, Jr. Physics § 268, p. 643, app. [L. B. & CO.]

2. Eccl. A breathing upon a person or thing as symbolic of the operation and entrance of the Holy Spirit, or the casting out of unclean spirits, as in some churches in the ordinance of baptism; or the exorcism of catechumens or of oil and water. 3. Med. A forcible blowing, as of air into the lungs, or of a gas, vapor, or powder into some opening or cavity. 4. Pathol. A method of decorating pottery by blowing color through a pipe screened at the end. [< LL. insufflatio(n-), < insufflatus; see INSUFFLATE.]

in'suf-fla'tor, 1 in'sə-flā'tər or -tor; 2 in'sə-flā'tor, n. An instrument or apparatus for blowing; especially, an apparatus for injecting air, etc., into a furnace, or an instrument for injecting air, medicated vapor, or fine powder into some cavity or opening of the body.

in'su-la, 1 in'shu-[or -siu-]lə; 2 in'shu-[or -sə-]lə, n. [-LE, 1 -lı; 2 -lē, pl.] 1. Anat. A group of convolutions of the hemispheres of the brain, buried and concealed by the frontal, parietal, and temporal lobes; the island of Reil. See under ISLAND. 2. Arch. An aisle. 3. Rom. Archeol. (1) A single block of houses; any space or square divided off and bounded, as by streets. (2) A tenement-house as distinguished from domus, land: in reference to pancreatic masses called islands of Langhans.]

in'su-lar, 1 in'shu-[or -siu-]lər, 2 in'sə-lər, a. 1. Of or pertaining to an island; characterizing the natural situation of an island; having the character of an island; also, standing alone; not united, as an insular climate; an insular fortress; in biology, having an island as its habitat; in entomology, said of galls found singly on a leaf. 2. Of or pertaining to people inhabiting an island or otherwise isolated, or to their customs, opinions, etc.; hence, free from foreign and cosmopolitan; narrow; contracted; as, insular ideas or prejudices.

The insular narrowness and self-confidence of the Ricardian School. A. MARSHALL, Principles of Economics vol. i, bk. i, ch. 4, p. 68. [MACM. 1890.]

in'su-la-ryt,—in'su-lar, n. [Rare.] An islander. in'su-lar-ryt.—in'su-lar-ly, adv. In a narrow or an insular manner.

in'su-lar-ism, 1 in'shu-[or -siu-]lər-ızm; 2 in'shu-[or -sə-]lar-ızm, n. The state or quality of being insular in personality; insularity or narrowness, as of character, opinions, or prejudices.

When Europe awoke from the sleep of the Middle Ages, the Roman law, indeed, continued to be regarded as authoritative, but the haughty insularism of the Roman had become a thing of the past. F. WHARTON Law of Agency p. 99. [K. & BRO. 1876.]

in"su-lar-i-ty, 1 in'shu-[or -siu-]lar'ı-tı; 2 in'shu-[or -sə-]lar'ı-ty, n. 1. The state or quality of being insular or belonging to an island; insular position, character, or condition; hence, narrowness or illiberality; insularism.

In saying this, I must not be understood to advocate any Knownothingism in literature, or to encourage what thus insularity, such as so frequently pervades English literary works.
T. DAVIDSON in The Forum May, 1891, p. 345.

in'su-lar-ize, vt. [Rare.] To transform into an island or treat as thus transformed.

in'su-late, 1 in'shu-[or -siu-]lēt; 2 in'shu-[or -sə-]lāt, vt. [-LAT-ED; -LAT-ING.] 1. To place in a detached state or situation, so as to have little or no connection or association with surrounding persons or objects; isolate. 2. To change into an island; surround by water. 3. Physics. To separate from other conducting bodies, as by a covering or support of a non-conducting substance, usually in order to prevent or lessen the leakage of the electric current from the object (as a wire) insulated, or to prevent the passage of heat. [< LL. insulatus, pp. of insulo, < L. insula; see ISLAND.]

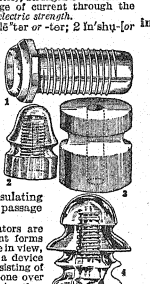
—insulating sleeve, tape, tube, etc. (Elec.), a sleeve, tape, tube, etc., suitable or used for surrounding or shielding a conductor and preventing the passage of electricity to or from it.—i. stool (Elec.), a stool with non-conducting legs or feet, used in handling live wires, or the like, to prevent a ground and a consequent shock to the operator.

in'su-late, a. Entom. Separated from other marks or parts of a similar kind.—insulate vein, a discal nervure in the wing of an insect, separated from the other nervures.

in'su-la-ted, 1 in'shu-[or -siu-]lēt-ed; 2 in'shu-[or -sə-]lāt-ed, pa. Astron. So far away as to be beyond any sensible effect of gravitation: said of stars very remote from each other.



in"su-la'tion, 1 in'shu-lā'shən; 2 in'sə-lā'shən, n. 1. The act of insulating, or the state of being insulated; detachment or separation from other objects; isolation. 2. The act of surrounding a body with or separating it from other bodies by means of non-conductors of electricity, heat, or sound, or the state of being so surrounded or separated. 3. Elec. Material used in insulating. 4. Brewing. A non-conducting substance used to prevent loss of heat and cold, as cork, cement, charcoal, mineral wool, paper, asbestos, air, etc.—in"su-la'tion-me'ter, n. A device for determining the degree of electric insulation.—i. resistance (Physics), strength of insulation offering resistance to a breakage of current through the insulator: distinguished from dielectric strength.

in'su-la'tor, 1 in'shu-[or -siu-]lē'tər or -ter; 2 in'shu-[or -sə-]lā'tor, n. One who or that which insulates. Especially: (1) A substance that is a non-conductor of electricity, heat, or sound, as cotton, gutta-percha, silk, and rubber, the dielectrics most commonly used for covering wires conveying electric currents.

Threads of silk, rods of glass, sealing-wax, and the like cannot act in this way (receive electricity), and accordingly they are called non-conductors or insulators. C. F. BRACKETT in Electricity in Daily Life, in Services of Man p. 5. [s. 1890.]

(2) A device made of an insulating substance, for preventing the passage of electricity, heat, or sound.

For practical purposes insulators are made in a variety of different forms adapted to the particular purpose in view, as the double-cup insulator, a device for insulating electric wires, consisting of two funnel-shaped cups, placed one over the other and supported by a pin, thus providing a free air-space between the petticoat, a form in which the base is outspread and enlarged: the pigtail i. which has a piece of twisted wire molded in at the top; the suckle i. which has unusually strong form used for insulating overhead wires: the slot i., made in the form of a ring, the wire passing through the slot in the center; the strain i., one used between an electric wire and the wire which supports it; and the umbrella i., one having an umbrella-like top to protect the base from the rain.

Insulators.
1. Insulator for conducting wires through partitions and floors. 2. Ordinary single-petticoat telegraph insulator. 3. Porcelain insulator. 4. Sectional view of double-petticoat glass insulator for telegraph and telephone wires.

—telegraphic or telephonic insulator, a non-conducting attachment by which to fasten a conducting wire to a support without loss or gain of electricity: usually made of glass, porcelain, or hard rubber.

in'su-li-form, 1 in'shu-[or -siu-]lı-förm; 2 in'shu-[or -sə-]lı-förm, a. Like an island in form.

in'su-lin, 1 in'shu-lin; 2 in'sə-lin, n. A chemical product, secreted by the pancreatic tissue, which checks the accumulation of glucose in the blood and is used in treating diabetes. [< L. insula, island: in reference to pancreatic masses called islands of Langhans.]

in'sul-ite, 1 in'shu-[or -siu-]lıt; 2 in'shu-[or -sə-]lıt, n. Elec. A substance used for insulating, made from waste-products, as cotton-waste: trade name.

in'su-lous, a. [Rare.] Abounding in islands.

in-sult', 1 in-sult'; 2 in-sult', vt. 1. To treat with gross indignity, insolence, or contempt, by word or act; offer an indignity or affront to; affront; as, to insult a man by doubting his veracity. 2. Pathol. To inflict injury upon; cause traumatism in. 3†. To attack suddenly; assault. 4†. To behave with insolence; exult or triumph insolently or offensively: often with against, on, over, etc. 2†. To attack; assault: used literally and figuratively. [< F. insulter, < L. insulto, < in-, on, leap on.]

SYN.: see AFFRONT; MOCK.—in-sul'a-ble†, a. Capable of being insulted; easily affronted.—in-sul'tance†, n. Insulting behavior.—in-sul'tant, a. [Rare.] Insulting.—in-sul'ta-tion†, n. 1. The act of insulting; insult. 2. Exultation.—in-sult'er, n. One who offers an insult.—in-sult'ment, n. [Rare.] The act of insulting; insult.

in'sult, n. Something said or done that is intended or supposed to be intended to hurt one's feelings or provoke one's resentment; an expression of insolence or gross discourtesy; an indignity or affront. 2. Contumelious treatment; abuse; outrage.

Contempt for private insult was one of the characteristics of ancient morals.
EMERSON Thoughts tr. by Calvert, p. 117. [W. v. s. 1867.]

3. Pathol. (1) An onset or beginning of a disease or paroxysm. (2) Any external violence resulting in a lesion. 4. [Rare.] A sudden attack or assault. 5†. A leaping upon something, as a horse; hence, a covering of the female by the male: said of cattle or horses. [< L. insultus, < L. insilio; see INSULT, v.] —insult hysteric, a paroxysm of hysteria.

in-sult'ing-ly, adv. In a manner to insult.

It was a den where no insulting light Could penetrate. KEATS Hyperion bk. ii, st. i.

in'sunk", 1 in'səŋk'; 2 in'səŋk', a. Sunk in; carved into; as, insunk stairs.

in-sup'er-a-bl(e)†, 1 in'sə-pėr'ə-bl; 2 in-sü'pər-ə-bl, a. 1. Incapable of being overcome, surmounted, or overcome; insurmountable; invincible; as, an insuperable difficulty. 2. [Rare.] Unsurpassable; that can not be excelled; as, an insuperable poem. [OF., < L. insuperabilis, < in-, not; and see SUPERABLE.]—in-sup'er-a-bil'i-ty, in-su'per-a-bl(e-ness†, n.—in-su'per-a-bly, adv.

in'sup-port'a-bl(e†, 1 in'sə-pōrt'ə-bl; 2 in'sə-pōrt'ə-bl, a. 1. Such as can not be borne or endured; intolerable; insufferable. 2. Without grounds or reason; unjustifiable; as, an insupportable claim. 3†. Irresistible. [< LL. insupportabilis, < L. in-, not, + supporto; see SUPPORT, v.]—in'sup-port'a-bl(e-ness†, n.—in'sup-port'a-bly, adv.

in'sup-pos'a-bl(e†, 1 in'sə-pōz'ə-bl; 2 in'sə-pōz'ə-bl, a. Such as can not be supposed; inconceivable.

in'sup-press'i-bl(e†, 1 in'sə-pres'ı-bl; 2 in'sə-prēs'ı-bl, a. Incapable of being suppressed or concealed; irrepressible.—in'sup-press'i-bly, adv.

in'sup-pres'sly(e†, a. [Rare.] Not suppressible.

in-sur'a-ble, 1 in-shūr'ə-bl; 2 in-shur'ə-bl, a. Capable of being insured.—in-sur'a-bil'i-ty, n.

in-sur'a-bl'i, [of being or suitable to be insured.—]insurable interest, a right, title, or lien in, to, or upon the life of a person, or some specific property sufficient to sustain a contract of insurance thereon. Legal authorities differ as to the meaning of insurable interest. In the United Kingdom it is generally held that blood-ties or friendship are insufficient and that a pecuniary interest is required in life insurance. In the United States a wider view is taken, but there is no unity of opinion. In fire insurance a property interest is required as in a sale, so as to differentiate between insurance and a wager or gambling contract.

in-sur'ance, 1 in-shūr'ens; 2 in-shur'ənc, n. 1. An act or system of insuring or assuring against loss; specif., the act or system by or under which indemnity or pecuniary payment is guaranteed by one party (as a company, society, association, or individual) or several parties to another party in certain contingencies upon specified terms; as, accident insurance; fire insurance; life insurance; marine insurance. See below.

Insurance (particularly life insurance) is sometimes called assurance, especially in Great Britain. Coinsurance is joint insurance by two or more insurers. Reinsurance is insurance effected (as in another company) by an insurer for his own protection, upon a risk already taken by him.

An insurance on the body of a ship . . . sweeps in, by the comprehensiveness of the expression, whatever is appurtenant to the ship. KENT Commentaries vol. iii, p. 257.

3. The premium or consideration paid for insuring. 4. The amount or sum that the insurer or underwriter has agreed to pay in case of the occurrence of the specified contingency. 5. Guaranty or pledge; ground of assurance; as, a sufficient insurance of divine protection.

Insurance against war by preparation for it is, of all methods, the most businesslike, the most economical, and the most in accordance with the teachings of the Christian religion.
S. D. LOCK in North American Review Dec., 1891, p. 673.

6. The action of insuring person or property. [Rare.] An insurance office. [< OF. enseurer; see INSURE.]

—accident insurance, a form of insurance covering loss due to accidental personal injury.—annuity i., insurance securing the payment of a fixed annuity for the benefit or part of life, in consideration of a lump sum paid by the insured.—assessment i., life insurance in which the death benefits are paid from the proceeds of assessments upon members of an association usually organized on a mutual insurance plan. The number of assessments each year is nominally limited, but the right is usually reserved in some clause to levy additional assessments when required.—automobile liability i., insurance covering liability of owner of automobile on account of injuries inflicted on persons, to property of others, and to the car itself due to its maintenance.—burglary i., insurance of property against loss through illegal entry and theft by burglars, sneak-thieves, etc.—casualty i., insurance of property against loss from accidental causes.—credit i., insurance covering loss to merchants and others arising from bad debts.—employers' liability i., insurance covering employers' liability for which the employer may be held responsible at law.—endowment i., a form of life insurance in which the whole amount agreed upon is paid to the insured if living at the time, or to some designated person or to his heirs if he dies before that time.—extended i., insurance accepted for a period of time on a lapsed policy, the condition being that payment of face value be made should the insured die within the period. A condition for the extension is generally to the effect that the surrender value of the policy be forfeited either wholly or in part.—fidelity i., insurance covering loss arising from an employee's dishonesty or default.—fire i., insurance covering loss or damage to property by fire or the efforts to extinguish fire. In fire insurance it is the custom to insist that property covered be insured to four-fifths of its value or pay an increased premium.—The usual term is for one year, but policies for 3 years, 5 years, or the payment of premiums is accepted as insuring the property forever.—fraternal i., insurance issued to its members by a fraternal beneficiary society or order.—graveyard i. (colloq.), fraudulent insurance effected upon the life of an aged or sick person.—hazardous i., insurance effected at a high premium where the risk is great, as on stores of petrol, celluloid factories, etc.—industrial i., insurance on the lives of the laboring classes for small amounts, the payments being made in weekly instalments.—i. agent, a person, firm, or corporation that represents an insurance company and acts for it in soliciting and doing business.—i. broker, a broker who represents persons desiring insurance, effects it for them, and looks after their insurance rights in advising them as to losses, interpretation of the terms of policies, etc.—i. commissioner, a public official who has supervision over insurance affairs and companies, as in some parts of the United States.—i. company, a corporation that insures against loss, damage, injury, or death.—i. engineer, a specialist on fire protection and prevention methods.—i. policy, a document containing the contract between the insurer and the insured.—i. reserve, that portion of an insurance company's assets set aside to be drawn upon to meet losses.—i. value, that present value of all the normal future yearly costs of insurance which by its terms a policy is expected to pay in case of its continuance.—joint-stock i. company, an insurance company having capital divided into shares and held by members of the company, who are not necessarily policy-holders.—life i., insurance on the life of oneself or of another.—The first life-insurance company established in Great Britain was the Amicable, in 1706, and the first in America was introduced from England in 1759 under the official title of Presbyterian Ministers' Fund, and established in Philadelphia.—marine i., insurance which covers loss on ships, cargo, and freight by shipwreck or disaster at sea.—mutual life-i. company, an insurance company without stockholders or capital stock, each policy-holder being a member of the corporation, sharing in profits and entitled to vote.—partnership i., insurance covering loss accruing to a firm from the death of one or more partners.—business-partnership i.—public liability i., insurance covering accidents to persons not in the employ of the occupant of the premises where the accident occurs.—surety i., insurance covering loss due to the default or dishonesty of persons holding places of trust, such as administrators of estates, etc.—title i., insurance covering loss arising from any flaw or defect in title to real property.—tontine i., see under TONTINE.

in-sur'ant, 1 in-shūr'ənt; 2 in-shur'ənt, n. One to whom an insurance policy is issued.

in-sure′, 1 in-shūr′; 2 in-shur′, v. [IN-SURED′; IN-SUR′ING.] I. t. 1. To contract, for a consideration, to pay a specified sum or sums to (a party or his representatives) upon the occurrence of a given contingency of loss, damage, accident, or death; make a subject of insurance; as, to insure property against fire, or a person against accident or death; to insure a vessel or cargo against wreck or loss. 2. To secure insurance of; as, to insure one's life. 3. To make sure or secure; assure; guarantee.

To enjoy the inestimable benefits which the liberty of the press insures, it is necessary to submit to the inevitable evils which it occasions. DE TOCQUEVILLE Democracy in Am. tr. by Bowen, vol. i, p. 234. [S. & P. 1863.]

II. i. 1. To make insurance. 2. To take out a policy of insurance; as, to insure in the Mutual. [< OF. enseurer, < en- (< L. in), in, + seur, sure, < L. securus: see SECURE, a.] in-sured′, 1 in-shūrd′; 2 in-shurd′, n. 1. The person or persons to whom insurance (as fire or marine) is to be paid after loss or damage of insured property. 2. The person or persons upon whose death or disability insurance (life or accident) becomes due.

in″sur-ee′, 1 in″shur-ē′; 2 in″shur-ē′, n. The beneficiary under or holder of an insurance policy.

in-sur′er, 1 in-shūr′er; 2 in-shur′er, n. 1. One who or that which insures; especially, a company or an individual that undertakes, for compensation, to make good losses, as by fire, or to pay sums on certain contingencies, as the death or injury of the insured; an underwriter. 2. The person insured; an incorrect use.

According to the construction of the English language the insurer is the one who insures, that is, in life and fire insurance, the company. H. W. MANLEY in Insurance Record, Dec. 1, 1899.

in-surge′, 1 in-sŭrj′; 2 in-sŭrj′, v. [IN-SURGED′; IN-SURG′ING.] i. [Rare.] To rise; specifically, to insurrectionize.

III. t. To rise up; become insurgent; revolt. [< F. insurger, < L. insurgo; see INSURGENT, a.] in-sur′gence, } 1 in-sŭr′jens, -jen-sē; 2 in-sŭr′ġens, -ġenin-sur′gen-cy, } sē, n. 1. The act of rising in insurrection, or the state of being insurgent; insurrection; uprising; incipient belligerency.

in-sur′gent, 1 in-sŭr′jent; 2 in-sŭr′ġent, n. 1. Uprising against lawful authority or an existing government; engaged in insurrection or rebellion against authority.

In New York, though it was ablaze with sympathy for the insurgent New Englanders, the spirit of authority was still distinctly unquestioned. ROOSEVELT Morris p. 35. [H. M. & CO. 1888.]

2. Surging up; rushing in, as the sea. [F., < L. insurgen(t-)s, ppr. of insurgo, rise against, < in, against, + surgo; see SURGE.]

in-sur′gent, n. 1. One who takes part in active and forcible opposition or resistance to the constituted authorities of a place or country; also, a rebel to whom belligerent rights have been granted. 2. [l-] pl. In Polit. A. a member or supporter of that section of the Republican party in Congress opposed to the rules of the House as existing in 1910, and organized (1911) as the "National Republican Progressive League."

in″sur-mount′a-ble, } 1 in″sur-mount′a-bl; 2 in″sŭrin″sur-mount′a-bl, } mount′a-bl, a. Not surmountable; such as can not be surmounted, passed over, or overcome; insuperable; as, an insurmountable chain of hills; an insurmountable difficulty. in″sur-mount′a-bil-i-ty, n. The state or quality of being insurmountable. in″sur-mount′a-bl(e-ness)′t. — in″sur-mount′a-bly, adv.

in″sur-pas′sa-ble, etc., obs. See INSUPERABLE, etc.

in″sur-rect′, } 2 in″sŭ-rekt′; 3 in″sŭ-rĕct′, vt. [Colloq.] To in″sur-rec′tion, } rise in or as in insurrection; rebel. [< L. insurrectus; see INSURRECTION.]

in″sur-rec′tion, 1 in″sur-rek′shon; 2 in″sŭ-rĕk′shon, n. 1. An organized and armed resistance to the established authority or government; rebellion in its initial stage; open resistance by numbers to constituted authority of the laws; the state of being in active resistance to authority.

I have often heard him [Parnell] say that an armed insurrection is a hopeless business in a country which has no mountain islands. MCCARTHY in Contemporary Review Nov., 1891, p. 627.

2. A rising in mass, as to oppose an enemy; an uprising.

It seems a singular fact that throughout the war there was no insurrection of the slaves. ROSITER JOHNSON War of Secession p. 207. [H. M. & CO. 1889.]

3. [Rare.] A rising up; upheaval. [< LL. insurrection-, < L. insurgo, pp. insurrectus; see INSURGENT.]

Syn.: see REVOLUTION. — in″sur-rec′tion-list, n. One who incites or takes part in an insurrection; an insurgent. in″sur-rec′tion-ert, } in″sur-rec′tion-ist, } n. [Rare.] To move or stir up to insurrection; as, to insurrectionize a country. in″sur-rec′tion-ist.

in″sur-rec′tion-a-ry, 1 in″sur-rek′shon-ā-ri; 2 in″sŭ-rĕk′shon-ā-ry, a. 1. Pertaining to, involving, or characterized by insurrection; favoring or engaged in insurrection; insurgent; seditious. 2. [Humor.] Inclined to rise out of place. in″sur-rec′tion-al; in″sur-rec′to-ry, } in″sur-rec′to, } 1 in″sur-rek′tō-ri, -rek′tō; 2 in″sŭ-rĕk′tō-ri, -rĕk′tō, a. Insurgent or rebel; fomenter of discontent with or insurgency toward the government. [Sp., < Lat. insurrecto.]

in″sus-cep′ti-bil′i-ty, 1 in″sus-sep″ti-bil′i-ti; 2 in″sŭ-çĕp″ti-bil′i-ty, n. Lack of susceptibility; incapacity to feel or to receive; unimpressibility.

in″sus-cep′ti-ble, } 1 in″su-sep′ti-bl; 2 in″sŭ-çĕp′ti-bl, in″sus-cep′ti-bl, } a. 1. Not susceptible. (1) Incapable of being moved or impressed with to; as, a heart insusceptible to pity. (2) Incapable of receiving or admitting; with of; as, a soul insusceptible of malice. in″sus-cep′tive-ness.

in-swathe′, vt. Same as ENSWATHE.

in′sweep″ing, 1 in′swīp″ing; 2 in′swēp″ing, a. Sweeping in.

in-t-, obs. Interest; interior; interjection; intermediate; interpreter.

in′t. [Archaic.] In it; a contraction.

in-tab′u-late, vt. [Rare.] To indicate in a table; enter in a list.

in-tact′, 1 in-takt′; 2 in-tăct′, a. 1. Left complete or unimpaired; whole; undiminished; as, to spend the interest but leave the principal intact.

To keep intact the moral and spiritual results. GLADSTON in N. Am. Review Jan., 1889, p. 121.

2. [Rare.] Untouched.

Utterly intact of sorrow. Careless of the distant morrow. ROSE TERRY COOKE Grisé st. 2.

in-tac′til(se), 1 in-tak′til; 2 in-tăc′til, a. [Rare.] That can not be touched; intangible.

in-ta′glio, 1 in-ta′lyo; 2 in-tä′lyo (xiii), n. [-GLII or -GLIOS, 1-lyi or -lyos; 2-lyi or -lyōs, pl.] 1. Art. Incised carving; a sunk design; creux; opposed to rilievo; also, the method or art of making such designs. Engraved gems and engraved plates for printing, so made, are called intaglios, the designs being cut in intaglio.

The intaglio of this beautiful gem is not deep, but sharp and distinct. LAYARD Nineveh and Babylon p. 136. [G. P. P. 1853.]

2. A work, especially a gem, with incised carving: opposed to cameo.

The bold Cameo speaks, the soft Intaglio thinks. DARWIN, ERASMUS DARWIN Bot. Garden, Econ. of Veg. can. 2. 310.

3. Mech. Any machine die for producing a relief design. [It., < intagliare, cut in, < LL. intalio; see ENTAIL, v.] — intaglio printing, printing from an engraved metal plate in which the engraved line has the positive value, the ink being withdrawn from the incised line by dampened paper which is subjected to heavy pressure.— in-ta′glist, n. To cut in intaglio. in-ta′gli-ot, — in-ta′glio-ist, n. Same as CAMEO-BLUEBEY. 1.-el″le-va′tor. — in-ta′glio-type, n. 1. A method of engraving intaglio designs on a metal plate by washing out ink-tracings on a coat of zinc oxid, and reproducing the designs thus obtained by the electrotype or stereotype process. 2. A work thus produced.

in-tail′, vt. & n. Same as ENTAIL.

in′take″, 1 in′tāk″; 2 in′tāk′, n. 1. That which is taken in; as, the annual intake and output of a farm; also, a taking in. 2. In the textile industry, a point at which a knit or woven article is narrowed. 3. The area in which a river-system receives its water supply. 4. The place a fluid is taken into a pipe or channel, as distinguished from the outlet; also, the current flowing in. 5. [North. Eng.] Land enclosed or cultivated, as distinguished from that which is waste.

When horses in the sunburnt intake stood. WORDSWORTH An Evening Walk st. 5.

6. Mining. The air-shaft in a mine. 7. Steam-engin. Admission; a fraud; swindle; also, a swindler; cheat. 8. Mech. The amount of energy or power taken into a machine or system.— in′take-hold″er, n. One who holds land under a grant from the State. in′take-valve″, n. A valve by which is regulated the supply of water, gas, oil, etc., to a boiler or engine. [which takes in.

in′tak″er, 1 in′tāk″er; 2 in′tāk′er, n. One who or that in′tak″ing, n. [Archaic.] 1. Seizure, as of a town. 2. [Scot.] Inclosure of moorland or cultivation.

in-tan′gi-bil′i-ty, 1 in-tan′ji-bil′i-ti; 2 in-tăn′ġi-bil′i-ty, n. Incapability of being touched; impalpable; incorporeal; figuratively, not directly appreciable by the mind; having no clear foundation; not intelligible; as, the meaning or reality.

in-tan′gi-bl(e-ness)′t. — in-tan′gi-bly, adv.

in-tan′gle†, in-tan′gle-ment†. Same as ENTANGLE, etc.

in-tan′nate-ble, a. [Rare.] Not capable of being dried up; inexhaustible.

in-tar′si-a, in-tar′si-a-tu′ra, n. [It.] Same as TARSIA, etc.

in-tar′sus, 1 in-tär′sus; 2 in-tär′sus, n. [-SI, pl.] A complete person or thing; a whole. 2. One of the infinite series of numbers, 1, 2, 3, etc., in contradistinction to a fraction; a whole number. [L., < in, not, + tango, touch.]

in-tas′tate, a. Without taste; not capable of tasting.

in-te′ger, as a + b √ −1.— ordinal i., a number or other mark of identification to indicate the position held by an object in a series.

in″te-gra-bil′i-ty, 1 in″ti-gra-bil′i-ti; 2 in″te-ġra-bil′i-ty, n. Math. Capability of being integrated.— in″te-gra-bil′i-ty-con-dī′tion, n. Math. A condition represented by an equation which must be satisfied when a differential equation (in x, y, z) has an integrating factor.

in′te-gra-bil′(e, 1 in′ti-gra-bil; 2 in′te-ġra-bil, a. Capable of being integrated.

in′te-gral, 1 in′ti-gral; 2 in′te-ġral, a. 1. Constituting a completed whole; containing all the parts; whole; as, integral excellence of character. 2. Constituting an essential part of a whole; necessary to completeness; intrinsic; integrant.

The philanthropic element is an integral element in all our best educational work. GLADDEN Applied Christianity p. 268. [H. M. & CO. 1886.]

3. Math. (1) Pertaining to an integer; of the nature of an integer; denoting an algebraic expression in which the only indicated operations are those of addition, subtraction, multiplication by integers, and raising to integral powers. 4. Mech. All of one piece (of metal or wood); as, the shaft and base are cast integral. [< LL. integralis, < L. integer; see INTEGER.] SYN.: see ENTIRE. — integral calculus, Math. the process (and the result) of finding a primitive function.— l. linear transformation (Math.), a linear transformation in which $c=0$.— l. transcendental function (Math.), a function (also called a transcendent) of values of the argument.— in′te-gral-ism, n. The quality of being integral; wholeness. in″te-gral′i-ty†. — in′te-gral-ly, adv.

in′te-gral, n. 1. Math. A function of variables that remains constant, or an equation or a set of equations that remain satisfied, so long as the differentials of the variables satisfy a given differential equation.

An integral may be regarded as a sum of differentials. Thus, the space passed over by a body moving with a velocity that varies continuously according to a given law is found by dividing the motion into elementary portions, each successively if it moved steadily during each of a series of infinitesimal periods with the velocity it had at the beginning of the period. Compare DIFFERENTIAL.

2. [Rare.] An integral part. 3†. A whole; integer.

— Abelian integral (Alg.), the integral $\int R(z, w)dz$, in which R is a rational and w a function of z that can be expressed by an irreducible polynomial equated to 0.— closed i. (Math.), an integral whose path of integration is a closed curve.— complete i. Math. 1. A solution of a partial differential equation of the first order containing an arbitrary constant for each of the independent variables. 2. In a higher order, the most general relation between the variables that satisfies the equation identically on substitution. — definite†., an integral whose summation extends only between definite limits.— elliptic i., one of the three integrals arising from the integration of an expression of the form $f(x, X)\,dx$, in which X is the square root of an entire function of x of the fourth degree, and f is a rational function. — general i., a relation between any number of variables involving independent functions of them, one less in number, as well as an arbitrary function of those functions.— improper definite i., a definite integral taken over some region in at least part of which the function to be integrated is indefinite or infinite.— indefinite i., a function which, being differentiated, yields a given result.— line i., surface i., or volume i., an integral of the values of a function at all points of a line, surface, or volume respectively.— linear i., in the calculus of the complex variable, an integral whose path in the plane of that variable consists of line-segments.— probability i. (Math.), the integral expressing the area of the probability curve.— variation of an i. (Math.), the amount by which the value of a definite integral along a varied curve exceeds its value along the original curve.— volume i. (Math.), an integral in which the region of value of the variable of integration is a volume.

in″te-gral-i-za′tion, 1 in″ti-gral-i-zā′shon; 2 in″te-ġral-i-zā′shon, n. The act or process of shaping a complete function.

in′te-grand, 1 in′ti-grand; 2 in′te-ġrănd, n. Math. An expression to be integrated, or whose integration is indicated. [< L. integrandus, gerund of integro; see INTEGRANT.]

in′te-grant, 1 in′ti-grant; 2 in′te-ġrant, a. Contributing or essential to the making up of a whole; integral.

Whatever tends to insulate man, to stifle the consciousness in him that he is an integrant part of society, produces egotism and crime. F. LIEBER Political Ethics vol. ii. p. 48. [L. 1890.] [< L. integrant(t-)s, ppr. of integro, make whole, < integer; see INTEGER.]

in′te-graph, 1 in′ti-graf; 2 in′te-ġrăf, n. Math. An expression to be integrated, or whose integration is indicated. [< L. integrandus, gerund of integro; see INTEGRANT.]

in′te-grant, 1 in′ti-grant; 2 in′te-ġrant, a. Contributing or essential to the making up of a whole; integral.

Whatever tends to insulate man, to stifle the consciousness in him that he is an integrant part of society, produces egotism and crime. F. LIEBER Political Ethics vol. ii. p. 48. [L. 1890.] [< L. integrant(t-)s, ppr. of integro, make whole, < integer; see INTEGER.]

in′te-graph, 1 in′ti-graf; 2 in′te-ġrăf, n. Math. An apparatus used for ship calculations which gives, in addition, the moments of areas about points or lines. [< INTEGRAL + -GRAPH.]

in′te-grate, 1 in′ti-grēt; 2 in′te-ġrāt, v. [-GRAT′ED; -GRAT′ING.] I. t. 1. To make into a whole; bring together the parts of; make or bring complete or entire; as, many suggestions are needed to integrate a plan. 2. To give the sum total of; indicate the whole or mean value of; as, an anemometer integrates the force of the wind. 3. Math. To find the integral of (a given differential expression). 4. To violate the integrity of (a moral part); as, the zoophyte arrests and integrates portions of matter moving through its medium.

II. i. To become whole or complete; especially, as used by Herbert Spencer, to pass from a complex and unstable to a relatively simple and stable condition.

The human races tend to differentiate and integrate as do races of other living forms. HERBERT SPENCER Essays vol. i. p. 353. [A. 1883.] [< L. integratus, pp. of integro; see INTEGRANT.] — in′te-grate-ly, adv. [Rare.] Entirely.

in″te-gra′tor, n. Of or pertaining to integration.

in″te-gra′tion, 1 in″ti-grā′shon; 2 in″te-ġrā′shon, n. 1. The act or process of integrating, or of being integrated; the bringing together of parts into a whole.

Integration of matter into worlds has taken place through a decline of heat. DRAPER Conflict bet. Religion and Science p. 242. [A. 1876.]

2. Math. The process of integrating or finding the integral. 3. Hydrometry. The determination of the average of the various velocities of flowing water at different depths, by moving the current-meter at a very slow, uniform speed up and down in a vertical line; contrasted with observations made at several fixed points in a vertical.

In shallow streams . . . the work can be shortened by what is called integration. J. W. POWELL Thirtenth Annual Rep. U. S. Geol. Survey, 1892–1893 pt. ii. pp. 13, [GOVT. PRO. 1894.]

4. Psychol. The combining of several elements into a complex entirety; also, a similar combination or state in which the elements can be distinguished. [L. integratio(n-), restoring, < L. integro; see INTEGRANT.] — definite integration (Math.), integration over a definitely bounded region.— graphical i., integration with the aid of the integraph.— i. by parts (Math.), the reduction of an integral by use of the formula $\int u\frac{dv}{dx}dx = uv - \int v\frac{du}{dx}dx$. — mechanical i., the use of the integraph.— reciprocal i. (Biol.), the combination of the male and female cells which results in the fertilization of an egg.— sign of i., a sign $\left(\int\right)$ prefixed to the differential whose integral is to be taken; originally a long s (for Latin summa, sum).

in′te-gra″tive, } 1 in′ti-grē″tiv; 2 in′te-ġrā″tiv, a. Tend-in′te-gra″tive, } ing to integration; conducive to the formation of a whole.

in'tel-lect, 1 in'te-lekt; 2 ĭn'tē-lĕkt, n. 1. The faculty or power of perception or thought; intelligence; mind; sometimes, the higher thinking powers, as distinguished from the senses and memory; as, intellect distinguishes man from brutes. 2. Intelligent people collectively; as, the intellect of the age is enlisted in these inquiries. 3. Psychol. (1) The faculty or power of understanding, whether of the objects immediately presented in sense-perception, or of those known by processes of reasoning. In perception, the work of intellect is largely expressed in the form of recognition, or interpretation of the sensation-elements fused with ideational elements, and thus composing the complex object of sense. It is chiefly, therefore, the intellectuality of the perception which gathers in those cases of psychical blindness or psychical deafness which result from functional impairment or disease of certain cerebral centers. See MIND; KNOW. (2) In the threefold division of the older psychology, the faculty of knowing, as distinguished from sensibility and will. The indefiniteness and complexity of this conception, however, made necessary a further subdivision into subordinate faculties as called. Hence the intellect was said to act as a cognitive faculty, or faculty of immediate knowledge; a conservative faculty, memory; a comparative faculty, thought; a constructive faculty, etc.

The leading faculties of the intellect are three: The presentative, or observing faculty; the representative, or creative faculty; the thinking, or the generalizing faculty.

PORTER Human Intellect p. 77. [s. 1870.]

(3) Sometimes, specif., the power to perceive things in a rational way, as involving a more than ordinary comprehension of their nature, and profounder meanings; the scientific or philosophical mind; as, Aristotle was a man of mighty intellect. (4) The sum of the mental powers by which knowledge is acquired, retained, and extended, as distinguished from the senses; the understanding.

The various faculties known as Memory, Judgment, Abstraction, Reason, Imagination, are modes or activities of Intellect.

BAIN Senses and Intellect bk. ii, p. 321. [A. 1879.]

Aristotle called the impersonal intellect, which was supposed to have created the world, the active, impassible i. and the intellect which is part of the individual and is destroyed upon death, the passive, patient, or possible i. Later, St. Thomas Aquinas defined the i. passivus (intellectus possibilis) as that which receives the impressions of sense, and the i. active (intellectus agens) as that which reasons on them. From the days of Greek philosophy down nearly to the present time, the i. has had as having to do with matters of conduct, has been distinguished from the speculative or theoretical. In modern philosophy such distinctions have gradually gone out of use.

4. pl. [Vulgar or Obs.] Mental powers; senses; wits; as, weak in his intellects. 5†. A spirit; intelligence; being possessed of understanding. 6†. The sense; meaning; signification of anything. [< L. intellectus, perception, < intelligo; see INTELLIGENT.]

SYN.: intelligence, reason, reasoning, understanding. As has already been said, according to the threefold division of the mental powers, the intellect is that assemblage of faculties which is concerned with knowledge, as distinguished from emotion and volition. Understanding is the Saxon word of the same general import, but is chiefly used of the reasoning powers; the understanding, which Sir Wm. Hamilton has called "the faculty of relations and comparisons," is distinguished by many philosophers from reason in that reason is the faculty of the higher cognitions or a priori truth." Compare INSTINCT; MIND; REASON.— Ant: body, brute force, matter, mechanism, passion, emotion, sense.—

Industrial improvements tend . . . to undue intensification of labour. J. RAE Contemporary Socialism p. 165. [s. 1884.]

2. Phot. The process of increasing the density of a negative.

in-ten'si-fi"er, 1 in-ten'si-fai"ar; 2 in-tĕn'si-fi"er, n. 1. One who or that which intensifies; specif., a chemical solution used in photography to effect intensification.

2. Mech. A device by which fluid pressure is intensified, as a two-part cylinder whose pistons are of different diameter, but rigidly connected.

in-ten'si-fy, 1 in-ten'si-fai; 2 in-tĕn'si-fy, v. [-FIED; -FY'ING.] I. t. 1. To make more intense; enhance greatly in degree; strengthen the force of; heighten; as, to intensify effort; to intensify hatred; to intensify colors.

2. Specif., in photography, to increase the density of the film of, with a view to obtain stronger contrast between light and shadow: said of the chemically affected parts of negatives. This is done either by drying over a lamp or by using an intensifier. Alcohol gives greater opacity; mercuric chlorid (corrosive sublimate) adds a layer to the original deposit.

II. i. To become intense, or more intense; act with increased energy. [< L. intensus (see INTENSE) + -FY.] SYN.: see AGGRAVATE; INCREASE.

in-ten'sion, 1 in-ten'shun; 2 in-tĕn'shon, n. 1. The act of straining or stretching, or state of being strained or made tense; tension; as, the intension of a musical string; different intensions of the voice. 2. [Rare.] Increase of energy or power; intensification. 3. Logic. Content.

The Breadth or Extension of a notion or term corresponds to the greater number of subjects contained under a predicate; the Depth, Intension, or Comprehension, to the greater number of predicates contained in a subject.

HAMILTON Metaphysics Lecture xxxvii, p. 506. [o. s. 1. 1859.]

4. Intensity; degree. 5. The perfection of a species by the prevention of inbreeding. 6. Econ. & Agric. Intensive practise or cultivation. [< L. intensio(n-), < intensus; see INTENSE.]

in-ten'si-tiv(es), 1 in-ten'si-tiv; 2 in-tĕn'si-tiv, a. Pertaining or relating to intensity or degree; giving intensity; intensive.

in-ten'si-ty, 1 in-ten'si-ti; 2 in-tĕn'si-ty, n. [-TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tiș, pl.] 1. The state or quality of being intense; relative strength or degree; quality or form of intenseness: as, the intensity of his grief; to lessen the intensity of one's exertions. 2. Phys. Sci. The force, energy, or quantity of action of any physical agent, generally estimated by its ratio to the space through which it acts, or to the quantity of matter on which it acts; as, the intensity of pressure of a fluid; the intensity of gravity. By the intensity of an electric or magnetic field is meant its strength as measured by the number of force-lines that pass through unit area of cross-section.

The intensity of sound is inversely as the square of the distance of the sonorous body from the ear.

GANOT Physics tr. by E. Atkinson, bk. v, p. 175. [w. w. 1877.]

3. Psychol. (1) The liveliness of a sensation in producing apperception. (2) In a simple sensation, the degree of exciting quality regarded as producing a sensation. 4. Photog. Strong contrast between light and shade in a negative; density; also, opacity. [< L. intensus; see INTENSE.]

SYN.: see EXTREMISM. — intensity, the Increase in numbers, activity, or distribution, as of fungi and insects, which occurs in conjunction with increased population and cultivation.— curr'ent-in'ten-sity, n. The strength, measured in amperes, of an electric current. Use in this sense is to be deprecated.— in-ten'si-ty-cur"rent, n. Elec. A current that flows in a circuit between two points whose difference of potential is one volt; a current of exceedingly high voltage.— l. of magnetic flux, the sum of lines of force traversing a unit area of cross section.— l., rhythm, n. Physiol. A rhythm depending entirely upon differences of intensity in the recurrent stimuli; one wherein the quality and duration of the stimuli are uniform throughout.— l.-verse, n. Verse whose rhythm depends primarily upon differences in intensive accentuation, instead of upon the alternation of short and long syllables: opposed to time-verse.— mean spherical i. (Photom.), the intensity of a source of light as obtained by averaging the intensities in all directions.— unit of photometric i., see PHOTOMETRIC UNITS, under PHOTOMETRIC.

in-ten'sive, 1 in-ten'siv; 2 in-tĕn'siv, a. 1. Serving or in-ten'sivș,] tending to intensify; specif., in grammar, adding emphasis or force; as, an intensive particle. 2. Admitting of increase of force or degree; capable of being intensified.

All objects of experience, as objects corresponding to sensations, have intensive quantity.

Critique of Pure Reason tr. into Kant vol. i, p. 497. [MACM. 1889.]

3. Thorough, as contrasted with extensive.

In visiting the schools of all grades in Germany, one comes to learn that the knowledge acquired is more intensive than extensive. J. T. PRINCE in Science Dec. 5, 1890, p. 336.

4. Logic. Relating to intension or content. See CONTENT. 5. Agric. & Econ. Of or pertaining to the tillage of land by the application of much labor and costly fertilization to a given (usually small) which is thereby brought to a high degree of productiveness: opposed to extensive. By extension, referring to the manner of making any industry more lucrative by perfecting methods and appliances without enlarging the scale of operations.

Switzerland takes rank next to Belgium in the perfection of its intensive culture, and like Belgium, is its population.

R. E. THOMPSON Social Science and Nat. Econ. p. 86. [e. & c.]

6. Pathol. Characterizing a method of inoculation wherein the injections of virus are successively increased in strength or the method of administering increasingly strong remedies or doses. 7†. Intense; assiduous. [< L. intensus; see INTENSE.] — intensive particle or prefix, a particle or prefix expressing heightened meaning: as be- in besmirch, beseech, for- in forlorn, forlone; de- in desiccate; per- in perfume. Large numbers of such modifying elements are found in Latin, Greek, German, and French.— in-ten'siv(es)ly, adv.— in-ten'siv(e-ness), n.

in-ten'siv(es), n. Whatever gives intensity or emphasis; specif., an intensive particle, word, or phrase.

in-tent', 1 in-tent'; 2 in-tĕnt', a. 1. Having the mind earnestly or sedulously bent or fixed; attentive: formerly used with an infinitive; now with substantives, governed by on or upon; as, intent to succeed; intent upon pleasure or business. 2. Firmly, constantly, or assiduously directed; fixed with or as with tense interest; as, an intent look; a mind intent upon improvement.

Where was she going with such an intent purpose in her face?
C. READE Hard Cash ch. xxxvi. [Longer's abridgt. p. 4. 1884.]

in-tent', n. 1. [Poet. or Rare.] That which is designed, purposed, or meant; intention; meaning; significance. 2. Logic. Intension, or connotation.

When the intent of meaning of a term is increased, the extent is decreased.

W. S. JEVONS Principles of Science bk. i, ch. 2, p. 32. [MACM.-1874.]

3. Law. (1) The state of mind in which or the purpose with which one does an act; determination. (2) The character that the law imputes to an act, irrespective of the personal intention of the actor.

There must be an intent to take usury, to constitute the offence.
FARNUM Contracts vol. ii, pt. ii, ch. 7, § 3.

4†. Attention. 5†. Idea; notion. [< OF., entent, < L. intentus, < intendo, pp.; see INTENT, a.] SYN.: see AIM; DESIGN; DRIFT; END; PURPOSE.— common intent (Law), the natural meaning of words, as spoken, to the sense which may be given to them by argument or inference.— criminal i. (Law), an intention to commit an act that is criminal.— to all intents and purposes, in all respects; practically.

in-ten'tion, 1 in-ten'shun; 2 in-tĕn'shon, n. 1. A settled direction of the mind toward the accomplishment of a particular act; fixed intent; design; specif., in ethics, one of the two elements in direct voluntary action, the character of an act. As an element in ethics determining the morality of conduct, intention implies a motive which has already been accepted by an act of will, but which has not yet been carried into effect. (2) The single act, or course of action, which corresponds to it. Hence the seeming ambiguity in the position that the character of the intention determines the morality of the subject who frames it, while it is right to abandon a wrong intention, and wrong not to carry out, if possible, a good intention. Compare RIGHT.

One question must be asked in judging of an agent's conduct is, . . . what was his aim, purpose, motive, intention?
D. D. CLEMONY Christian Ethics pt. i, p. 185. [n. a. b. 1875.]

2. (1) That upon which the mind is set; anything intended to be done; purpose conceived: often in the plural; as, a person of excellent intentions. (2) In the plural, purposes with regard to marriage: a colloquial use. 3. Full meaning, formerly ascertained, will always prevail over the literal sense of terms.

KENT Commentaries vol. i, p. 462.

3. Law. An intelligent purpose to do a certain act; intent; purpose: an essential element in a criminal offense. 4. Surg. Natural course, operation, or process, as in the healing of a wound. See phrases below. 5. Scholastic. Logic. A general concept; especially, one of several concepts formed from other concepts considered as objects; a second intention. See phrases. 6. Rom. Law. That part of a formula that sets forth the matter in dispute between two litigants. 7. Eccl. (1) The purpose on the part of the minister of a sacrament to do what the Church requires to be done in the matter: essential to the validity of a sacrament. (2) The purpose of the people, as offers up prayer or other devotions: often with special or particular. 8. [Archaic.] Earnest attention; application.

Therefore when thou prayest do it considerately, advisedly, and with the whole intention of thy soul.
JEREMY TAYLOR Golden Grove, or Manual of Daily Prayers and Litanies ch. ii, p. 187. [BRIDGE. 1852.]

[F., < L. intentio(n), < intentus; see INTENT, a.] SYN.: see AIM; DESIGN; DRIFT; END; PURPOSE.— first i. (Logic), a notion of an object or kind of object formed from materials outside of the mind, as house, virtue, disposition, to run.

The first intention of a Term is a certain vague and general significance, which is opposed to one more precisely limited, which it bears in some particular art.

C. S. PEIRCE Popular Science Monthly Logic p. 174. [D. A. 1876.]

— healing by first i., the union of divided parts without suppuration.— healing by second i., the union of divided parts by granulation following suppuration.— healing by third i., the union of wounds by edges of granulating fleshy granulations.— second i. (Logic), a conception of another notion or notions or of their relations, as species, genus, proposition.— to the i., to the purpose.

in-ten'tion-al, 1 in-ten'shon-al; 2 in-tĕn'shon-al, a. 1. Done with intention or purpose; intended; designed.

But the consequences of an act cannot be intentional, without the motive which called them into existence.
JEREMY BENTHAM Works, Morals and Legislation in vol. i, p. 40. [w. r. 1843.]

2. Psychol. Of or pertaining to intentionals. 3. Heb. Gram. Same as COHORTATIVE. SYN.: see DELIBERATE.— intentional being. 1. An entity which is merely a mental construct. 2. In scholastic philosophy, a being (ens intentionale) which has only conspicuous existence, as distinguished from existence in reality (ens reale).

in-ten'tion-al, n. In medieval philosophy, an intermediate and vicarious object perceived: called also intentional species or form; also, an incorporeal phenomenon; delusive appearance. in-ten'tion-a-ry, a. — in-ten'tion-al'i-ty, n. — in-ten'tion-al-ly, adv.

in-ten'tioned, 1 in-ten'shond; 2 in-tĕn'shond, a. Having designs or intentions: usually in composition with a qualifying adverb; as, well-intentioned; ill-intentioned.

in-ten'tive, a. 1. Attentive; intent. 2. Requiring attention.— in-ten'tive-ly, adv.— in-ten'tive-ness, n.

in-ter', 1 in-tûr'; 2 in-tĕr', vt. [IN-TERRED', IN-TERR'ING; IN-TERRS'.] To place in a grave or tomb, as a corpse; bury in the earth; inhume. [< F. enterrer, < LL. interro, < L. in, into, + terra, earth.] SYN.: see BURY.

Then lay me forth: although unqueen'd, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me.
SHAKESPEARE King Henry VIII. act iv, sc. 2.

in'ter-, 1 in'tur-; 2 in'tĕr-, prefix. Between; together; among. [ME. enter-, inter-, < OF. entre-, inter-, < L. inter, in, between, among, < in, in, + common suffix -ter.]

Words beginning with inter- that have special importance will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups. Other words with this prefix are self-explaining in classes, as follows: (1) Words marked * in which inter- adds the sense of 'situated, acting, or occurring between or among; between; intermediate'; as, interatomic, between the atom: interdiffuse, to diffuse between or among. In the case of many adjectives the corresponding noun should be substituted in the definition; as, interatomic, between atoms. (2) Words marked ‖ in which inter- adds the sense of 'together; mutual; mutually; one with the other'; as, interchain, to chain together; intercontradictory, mutually contradictory. in"ter-ac"a-dem'ic, a. Common to two or more academic institutions; as, interacademic relations.— in"ter-ac'ro-so'ry, a. Placed between the accessory processes of two contiguous vertebræ, as certain muscles of the back.— in"ter-act', vi. To act reciprocally upon each other.— in"ter-act', n. Theat. A short piece between acts; hence, intermediate employment or time.

in"ter-ac'tion, 1 in'tur-ak'shun; 2 in'tĕr-ăc'shon, n. 1. Reciprocal action or influence; as, the interaction of the planets. 2. Intermediate action.— in"ter-ac'tion-al, a. Pertaining to interaction.

in"ter-ac'tion-ism, 1 in'tur-ak'shun-izm; 2 in'tĕr-ăc'shon-izm, n. Philos. The theory that body and mind really interact, as opposed to automatism or phenomenal parallelism; the assumption that the mind is a real being, which can be acted upon by the brain, and which can act on the body in turn. G. T. LADD Elements of Physiological Psychology.— in"ter-ac'tion-ist, n.

in"ter-ac'tive, a. Reciprocally active.— in"ter-ad'di-tive, a. Added between something else; inserted, as a parenthesis.— in"ter-ad-ven'tu-al, a. Between the first and second advents.— in"ter-a'gent, etc. See INTER.— in"ter-ag-glu'ti-na'tion, n., vt. & vi. To produce interagglutination.— in"ter-ag-glu'ti-na'tive, a. Agglutinative, occurring between closely affiliated bacilli.— in"ter-a'lar, a. Lying between the wings.— in"ter-al'i-, n. Entailing.— in"ter-al-ve'o-lar, a. Situated between the alveoli, as of the lungs, or of the dentary apparatus of a sea-urchin.— in"ter-am"bu-la'cr-um, n. [-CRA or -CRUMS, pl.] Echin. One of the imperforate plates or areas between the ambulacra as in a sea-urchin.— in"ter-am"bu-la'cral, a. Echin. Between ambulacra; of or pertaining to interambulacra.— in"ter-am'ni-an, a. Located between rivers; applied to Mesopotamia.— in"ter-an-de'an, a. Occurring between or amid the Andes.— in"ter-an'nu-lar, a. Between rings: applied to the segments of a nerve between the contiguous constrictions or rings of Ranvier.— in"ter-an'ode, n. Elec. That one of two auxiliary electrodes placed in the part of a current in an

in"ter-bi-end", etc. See INTER-.

in"ter-bod"y, n. An anbocoetor of normal blood-serum, as distinguished from those resulting from special immunisation.

in"ter-bor"ough, 1 in"ter-bur"o; 2 in"ter-bôr"o, a. Pertaining to or situated or running in two or more boroughs; as, an interborough railway.

in"ter-hourse", a. Finance. Relating to securities operations in which are being conducted in several countries at the same time.—in"ter-bran"chi-al, a. Between the gills; specif., designating a plate in the cup of a crinoid situated between each pair of brachials.—interbrachial membrane, a membrane between the arms of some dibranchiate cephalopods.—in"ter-brain", n. Anat. The portion of the brain that is derived from the second cerebral vesicle; the thalamencephalon.—in"ter-branch", a. Being or operating among branches; as, an interbranch loan system in a library.

in"ter-breed", 1 in"ter-brīd'; 2 in"ter-brēd', v. t. & i. To cause (animals or plants) to breed by crossing; cross-breed; hybridize.

II. i. To make a business of cross-breeding or hybridization. 2. To breed with one another: said of organisms of different species or varieties.—in"ter-breed"ing, n. The practice of cross-breeding or hybridization; a mingling of species or varieties.

in"ter-ca-dence, n. Pathol. An additional or supernumerary beat of the pulse which may occur between two full beats.—in"ter-ca"dent, a. Relating to or marked by irregularity in rhythm: said of the pulse.—in"ter"ca-la"re, n. [-RE-A, pl.] 1. The opisthotic bone. 2. Crust. A coxocerite.—in"ter"ca-la"ri-um, n. [NL.] Crust. A ventral part of the vertebra in some animals so situated as to lie between the base of its neural arch and that of the adjacent vertebra.

in-ter"ca-la-ry, 1 in-tûr'kə-lē-ri; 2 in-tėr'ə-lā-ry (XIII), a. 1. Chronol. (1) Introduced or added to the calendar, as a day or days periodically added to a month or year, to make the reckoning of time agree; as, the 29th of February in leap-years is an intercalary day.

In reckoning the year, they [the Egyptians] not only added to the 12 solar months of 30 days 5 intercalary days to make 365, but becoming aware that even this was not accurate, they corrected its variation till it should come round in a cycle of 1,461 years, as determined by the rising of Sirius.—E. B. TYLOR Anthropology p. 334. [A. 1889.]

(2) Containing an added day; as, an intercalary year. 2. Inserted between; interposed; interstitial; as, an intercalary refrain in a metrical composition. Specif.: (1) Biol. Intermediate but not transitional. (2) Geol. Lying between other strata. (3) Anat. Interposed between other parts. [< L. intercalarius, < intercalo: see INTERCALATE.] in-ter"ca-la-ry, n. [-RIES, pl.]—intercalary days (Med.), days intervening between the critical periods of an intermittent disease.—i. growth (Bot.), growth by the intercalation of new cells between the parts of the old, as in certain algæ.—i. lunar year, a year into which one month is intercalated, so that it contains 13 lunar months or 384 or 385 days.—i. period, see PERIOD.

in-ter"ca-late, 1 in-tûr'kə-lēt; 2 in-tėr'ə-lāt, v. [-LAT-ED; -LAT-ING.] 1. To insert or interpolate, especially in an irregular manner; as, to intercalate a new line in an old song. 2. Chronol. To introduce into the calendar, as complementary days.

First, the month might be taken as a constant measure of time, and four weeks, of seven days each, . . . could be intercalated.—Proctor Great Pyramid p. 215. [c. a w.]

2. Eccl. To exclude from religious privileges or functions. [< OF. interdicter, < L. interdictus, pp. of interdico, < inter- (see INTER-) + dico, say.]— in"ter-dic'tive(s), a. Pertaining to or constituting an interdict.— in"ter-dic'to-ry, a. Interdictive.

in"ter-dict, 1 in"ter-dikt; 2 in"ter-dĭct, n. 1. A prohibitive order; restraining decree; authoritative act of prohibition. 2. Rom. Law. An interlocutory edict of the prætor, in matters affecting right of possession. 3. Scots Law. An ecclesiastical censure. 4. R. C. Ch. A censure or prohibition excluding the members of the church from participation in its rites. Interdicts are local when they affect churches or buildings, personal when they affect particular persons only, total when the prohibition extends to all rites, and partial when it is restricted to specified rites. Interdict differs from excommunication in its scope of Christian society, and from suspension which affects the powers of clerics.

As the fatal day of St. Bartholomew approached . . . two thousand ministers were silenced by interdict.

GARDINER SPRING Power of the Pulpit p. 63. [n. & sch. 1848.]

5. [Louisiana.] Law. A person who, by reason of imbecility, insanity, or madness, is judicially prohibited (by process of interdiction) from taking care of his own person and managing his estate. [< L. interdictum, < interdictus; see INTERDICT, v.] in"ter-dict'ion, 1 in"ter-dik'shon; 2 in"ter-dĭc'shon, n. 1. The act of interdicting or prohibiting by authority; official prohibition. 2. Law. Restraint, by judicial decree, under which an insane or imbecile person is placed as to the care of his estate. [< L. interdictio(n-), < interdico; see INTERDICT, v.] in"ter-dit'ment†.

in"ter-dic'tor, n. Scots Law. A trustee or guardian who has authority to interdict.— in"ter-dif"fu-sive'ly-ty, n. The rate at which heat is diffused into any body through the unit area of a horizontal plane.— in"ter-dig'it, n. The portion of the hand or foot between adjoining fingers or toes.

in"ter-dig'i-tal, a. Situated between the digits, as certain folds of skin. See HAND.

in"ter-dig'i-tate, 1 in"ter-dij'i-tet; 2 in"ter-dĭg'i-tāt, v. t. To place between the fingers; interlock, as the fingers. II i. Anat. To interlock by finger-like processes, as insertions of muscles.

in"ter-dig"i-ta'tion, n. 1. The act of interdigitating, or the state of being interdigitated. 2. The interdigital space. 3. One of the processes by which muscles interdigitate.

in"ter-dome", n. Arch. The space between inner and outer shells of a dome or cupola.— in"ter-dor'sal, n. Zool. One of the posterior pair of dorsal or carinate scutellæ which may form a structural element in an arrocentrous vertebra.

— in"ter-dor'sal, a.— in"ter-duce, n. [Rare.] Carp. An interior.— in"ter-dy'tal, n. Zool. Combining in general concept the ideas of integration and differentiation; noting a form of notation in which $\frac{y}{x-1}$ is written for $\int ydx$.— in"ter-e-pim'er-al, a. Zool. Situated between the epimera; as, interepimeral membranes.

in"ter-ep"i-the'li-al, etc. See INTER-.

in"ter-es'se, 1 in"ter-es'ē; 2 in"ter-ĕs'ē, n. [L.] Law. 1. Ownership in property. 2. Interest for the use of money.— interesse termini, the interest a lessee holds after a lease is granted and prior to his tenure of the property leased.

in"ter-est, 1 in"ter-est; 2 in"ter-ĕst, v. t. 1. To excite the sympathy, curiosity, or attention of; engage the attention of: as, interested in a novel. 2. To induce to participate; cause to take a share; concern; engage; as, to interest a capitalist in ship-building. 3. Originally, to be of advantage to; be to the interest of. 4. To affect; concern; to interest, pp. of interesse, < OF. interesser, < L. interesse (inf. interesse); see INTERJECT, n.] in"ter-est'.

SYN.: amuse, attract, concern, engage, entertain, excite, hold, import, matter, occupy. Interest is used absolutely without a preposition, and with or without other qualification; concern implies a measure or estimate of value; as, it imports much to me; what does that import? See AMUSE; CONCERN.— ANT.: bore, disturb, fatigue, tire, weary, worry.— in"ter-est'er, n.

in"ter-est, n. 1. Attention with a sense of concern, or of the special importance of a thing to oneself or in one's own mind, whether pleasant or painful; personal concern; lively sympathy or curiosity; as, to engage his interest; public interest in a subject. 2. Psychol. The conscious feeling of concernment in an object, regarded especially as a stimulant and guide to the arousement and direction of attention.

Something further is necessary to that lively interaction of mind and object which we call a state of attention; and this is interest. J. SULLY Outlines of Psychol. p. 139. [A. 1884.]

3. Pedagogy. The effort of attention on the part of the pupil encouraged by the endeavor of the teacher to make his subject attractive.

The leaning forward of the body denotes interest.

MCCOSH Emotions p. 97. [s. 1880.]

4. That which is of advantage or profit; participation in profit; benefit; behoof; good: sometimes used in the plural; as, public interests; a matter of supreme interest.

What interest, asks he, 'has South Carolina in a canal in Ohio?' WEBSTER Works vol. iii, p. 238. [D. A. P. & co. 1853.]

5. Payment for the use of money, or money so paid; an agreed or statutory compensation accruing to a creditor during the time that a loan or debt remains unpaid, reckoned usually as a yearly percentage of the sum owed.

Canon law vigorously condemned the exacting of anything over and above the capital except under special circumstances, and the usury was to be restored or attached to exaction. An extrinsic title or claim to interest was allowed when the lender was in danger of losing his capital or when his advance of money deprived him of increase that would otherwise have accrued to him.

Aristotle, like the ancients generally, taught the sinfulness of interest. Money, he said, was barren. R. T. ELY Intro. to Polit. Econ. pt. vii, ch. 2, p. 316. [CHAUT. 1883.]

6. Figuratively, something added in making a return; as, to return a blow with interest. 7. Proprietary right or share: part ownership; as, buying an interest in a business; a life interest in an estate. 8. The person or persons interested in some department of work or business; as, the iron interest; the labor interest. 9. Power to excite favorable regard; influence; as, interest with the administration. 10. Selfish consideration; private advantage; interestedness; as, thinking of one's own interest. See SELF-INTEREST. [OF., < L. interest, it concerns, 3d pers. a. pres. ind. of intersum, be between, < inter (see INTER-) + sum, be.]— in"ter-est-ed-ness, n. interest (Finance), interest accumulated since date of last payment, the not yet due: said of bonds sold since the last interest date.— compound interest (Rom. Dutch Law), interest that compensates the creditor for his direct loss in not using his money.— compound i., the interest that accrues when that of each year is added to the principal, and the interest for each following year computed on the whole, as a new principal.— ex i. (Finance), without interest; not including interest, as registered bonds sold ex gratuity.— gross i., a combined charge, not only for the use of a sum of money, but for other things involved, such as depreciation, risk, etc.— landed i., landowners as a class, or persons having interest in land; also, the interest of landowners as connected in the plural.— lucrative i. (Rom. Dutch Law), interest allowed to cover the possible profits that might have accrued to the creditor if he had not been prevented from using them.— maritime i., extra or higher rate of interest allowed because of extra risk where money is advanced on a bottomry bond.— monetary i. (Rom. Dutch Law), interest due as damages for delay in payment.— net i., interest in payment for the loan only, excluding charges for risk, depreciation, etc.— penal i. (Rom. Dutch Law), interest imposed by statute as a penalty.— simple i., interest computed on the original principal alone.

in"ter-est-ed, 1 in"ter-es-ted; 2 in"ter-ĕst-ĕd, pa. 1. Having the attention engaged or the senses aroused; having a feeling of personal concernment; as, an interested audience. 2. Having an individual advantage or concern; hence, biased; as, an interested witness.

Any possibility of interested motives will discredit evidence.

ARCHBISHOP WHATELY Common Sense sect. iv, p. 426. [H. 1876.]

3. Having a possessory interest; being a part-owner: as, one interested in railroad shares.— -ly, adv.— -ness, n.

in"ter-est-ing, 1 in"ter-es-ting; 2 in"ter-ĕst-ing, pa. Engaging the attention; exciting curiosity; exciting agreeable interest or predilection; as, an interesting anecdote.

A face not handsome, nor the reverse, but rather what detracting women call interesting.

J. W. DEFOREST New and Old p. 37. [n. & c. 1859.]

SYN.: see ATTRACTIVE.— in an interesting condition, pregnant.— in"ter-est-ing-ly, adv. In an interesting manner.— in"ter-est-ing-ness, n.

in"ter-es'tu-a-rine, a. Geol. Situated between two estuaries.

— in"ter-face", n. Math. A surface separating two contiguous regions of space.— in"ter-fa'cial, a. Mineral. Formed by or relating to two faces of a polyhedron.— in"ter-fas-cic'u-lar, a. Anat. & Bot. Situated between fascicles.— interfascicular cambium between the fibrovascular bundles in the stems of exogenous and gymnospermous plants.— in"ter-fault, a. Geol. Between two faultings.— in"ter-fec'tor, n. One that kills, as, in astrology, a destructive planet.

in"ter-fed'er-a'tion, etc. See INTER-.

in"ter-felt'ed, a. Geol. So intimately forced together by pressure as to form a compact mass without distinct planes along contiguous surfaces: said of different kinds of strata.—

in"ter-fen'i-ne'um, n. The region between the thighs.

in"ter-fe-nes'tral, a. Between windows.— in"ter-fer'ens-tra'tion, n. Arch. The space between windows; the art of spacing windows properly.— in"ter-fer'ant, n. U. S. Law. A contestant in the Patent Office in a case of interference.

in"ter-fere', 1 in"ter-fir'; 2 in"ter-fēr', vi. [-FERED'; -FER'ING.] 1. To enter into or take part in the concerns of others, especially to prevent some action: interpose; sometimes in a hostile sense. See INTERPOSE.

So far as the government interferes in private concerns in order to prevent encroachments of the more powerful classes—so far, and only so far, it is entitled to support. HERBERT SPENCER Liberty. ISAAC L. RICE in North Am. Review Jan., 1883. p. 53.

2. To happen as an obstacle, check, or hindrance; interveney discharge; disturb; as, I shall go to-morrow if nothing interferes. 3. To come into mutual conflict; clash; as, interests interfering with each other. 4. Patent Law. To claim priority for an invention. 5. To strike a shoe or hoof against the fetlock of the opposite leg: said of horses. 6. Phys. Sci. Mathematically, to act or modify one another, as waves of light, sound, or electricity. See INTERFERENCE, 2. 7. Ball-playing. To obstruct improperly the course of a base-runner between bases in baseball, or of a tackler in football. 8. Philol. To modify by interference. [< F. interférer, < L. inter (see INTER-) + ferio, strike.] SYN.: see INTERPOSE.

— in"ter-fer'ent, a. Verging on interference; interfering.— in"ter-fer'er, n.— in"ter-fer'ing, n. In farriery, the striking of one foot against another by a horse in motion. When a hind foot strikes a fore foot it is overreaching. See OVERREACHING.— in"ter-fer'ing-shoe", n. A shoe made as to prevent a horse from interfering.— in"ter-fer'ing-ly, adv.

in"ter-fer'rence, 1 in"ter-fir'ens; 2 in"ter-fĕr'ĕns, n. 1. The act of interfering, in any sense of the verb.

And the preachers were directed to hold their Sunday worship at five o'clock in the morning and at the same hour in the evening, to avoid interference with the Church worship.

ABEL STEVENS Hist. Methodism vol. i, p. 434. [c. & p. 1858.]

2. Phys. Sci. The action of two vibratory motions or effects that tend to neutralize or to augment each other by a combination of opposite or of like phases of motion. Especially: (1) Optics. The combination of two rays of light so that one destroys or increases the brightness of the other, shown especially in thin transparent plates, where the interference is between rays reflected respectively from the front and back, and in diffraction. See DIFFRACTION.

With monochromatic light it is manifested by dark bands, usually alternating with light ones (interference fringes). The width of these differs with the color; hence, with white light, the bands due to each component color show, by overlapping, all the colors of the rainbow, producing an interference spectrum. See SPECTRUM. The interference of converging polarized rays in passing through certain crystals produces beautiful symmetrical designs called interference figures. See illus. The undulatory theory of light explains perfectly the phenomenon of interference. See LIGHT.

Interference Figures.

The doctrine of interference, is thus announced. 1. That the same rays of light falling upon the same point of an object will turn into all sorts of colours by the various inclination of the object. 2. Interference figure of a biaxial crystal. 3. That colours be-crystal when the axes of the polarizer and gin to appear when analyzer are at right angles to each other. two pulses of light are blended so well and so near together that the sense takes them for one.

BREWSTER Newton p. 99, note. [a. 1830.]

(3) Acoustics. The combination of two musical notes of opposite phase so as to produce comparative silence or greater intensity. (3) Wireless Telegr. The annulling of distinctness in signals by the mingling and disappearance of electric waves. See MIX, v. 3. Law. The conflict created by applying attention for a patent, covering, wholly or partly, any pending application or unexpired patent. 4. Philol. The influence of a sound, word, or phrase upon another sound, word, or phrase tending to produce a slight change in its sound, place, or form, such as in assimilation, contamination, metathesis, epenthesis, etc. 5. Mech. A condition in which the lines of action intersect when the gearing of gear-teeth is not designed accurately.

SYN.: see FRICTION.—interference comparator, an interferometer.—†, tube, a tube so constructed as to divide into two branches a sonistic or electric waves and bring one branch into interference with the other.

in"ter-fe-ren'tial, 1 in"ter-fi-ren'shal; 2 in"ter-fe-rĕn'shal, a. Of or pertaining to interference, especially, in physics, to optical interference.—ential refractometer. See INTERFERENCE REFRACTOMETER, under RE-FRACTOMETER.

in"ter-rom'e-ter, n. An instrument for measuring optical interference, as the interference refractometer.—in"ter-fer'ric, a. Between two pieces of iron, as the ends of a magnet.—in"ter-fer'til(e)s, a. Biol. Fertile when interbred.

in"ter-fi-bril'lar, etc. See INTER-.

in"ter-fi'lar, a. Biol. Situated between the filaments of a reticulum; as the cytoplasm of a cell.—in"ter-fil'tel, vt. [Rare.] To intertwine.—in"ter-fil'trate, vt. To intermingle, as two liquids.—in"ter-flange", n. The space between two flanges.—in"ter-flant', n. [Rare.] To stand between.—in"ter-fil'ge-ence, n. [Rare.] The state of being interfluent.—in-ter'flu-ent, a. 1. Flowing between. 2. Flowing together; blending. 3. Interfluvial.—in"ter-fluves, n. Geol. The territory between two rivers.—in"ter-flu'vi-al, a.—in"ter-flux, n. Mutually flaxing: intermingling.—in"ter-fo"lia-ceous, a. Bot. Situated between opposite or whorled leaves and the axis from which they spring, as the stipules in certain madderworts.—in"ter-fo'li-ar, a. Bot. Growing or situated between the leaves.—in"ter-fo'li-ate, vt. [Rare.] To interleave.—in"ter-fo'li-a"tion, n. [Rare.] The insertion of blank leaves in a book.—in"ter-fret'ted, a. Her. Interlaced.—in"ter-fre-quen'tion, n. A mutual friction. in"ter-frie'tion†.—in"ter-fron'tal, a. Anat. Situated between two portions of the frontal bones; as, the interfrontal suture.—in"ter-fur"row, n. The furrow proper as distinguished from the ridges on either side; dead furrow.

in"ter-fuse', 1 in"ter-fiūz'; 2 in"ter-fiūz', vt. [-FUSED'; -FUS'ING.] I. t. 1. To cause to flow together, as two fluids; cause to permeate or spread throughout, as a fluid between or among parts, pores, tissues, etc. 2. To cause to blend; mingle intimately or indistinguishably; intermix.

II. i. To flow into or mingle one with another; interpenetrate; commingle; blend.

Pictures whose airy hues Do blend and interfuse.
LEIGH CLAY Translucina st. 20.

[< L. interfusus, pp. of interfundo, < inter (see INTER-) + fundo, pour.]—in"ter-fu'sion, n. A pouring or spreading between; a mixing together; a mingling.

In Lansing's Essay on Education, the notion interfusion of thought and phrase which only imagination can achieve.
LOWELL Among my Books first series, p. 245. [c. a. co. 1871.]

in-ter'ga-ne-tri†, n. Intergonidium; a spermatium.—in"ter-ge-net'ic, a. Generated during the ontogeny of an individual or of his race; ontophyletic. J. M. BALDWIN Development and Evolution p. [1.]—in"ter-gen'tial, a. Situated or taking place between tribes or races; international.—in"ter-glit', a. Gilded between (certain parts).—in"ter-gla'cial, a. Geol. Of, pertaining to, occurring during, or formed during the period between distinct stages of continental glaciation.—in"ter-glu-te'al, a. Between the buttocks.—in"ter-glyph', n. Arch. The space between consecutive glyphs in a triglyph or similarly channeled member.—in"ter-go'ni-al, a. Anat. Situated between the two gonia or angles of the lower jaw.—in"ter-gra-da'tion, n. Gradation between.—in"ter-grade', vi. [Rare.] To mingle gradually with each other at the boundary, as two varieties.—in"ter-grade", n. An intermediate grade or form.—in"ter-gra'di-ent, a. Intergrading; merging.—in"ter-graft', vt. Bot. To graft reciprocally; as between two species or forms; to join by grafting.—in"ter-graf'ting, n.—in"ter-grave', vt. [Rare.] To engrave between.

in"ter-group", etc. See INTER-.

in"ter-grow', vi. To grow together or intermixed.—in"ter-grown', a.—in"ter-growth", n. 1. The process of intergrowing; an intergrown product; specif., a growth of spherulites. 2. Bot. An intussusceptive growth.—graphic intergrowth, see GRAPHIC TEXTURE, under TEXTURE.—in"ter-gu'lar. I. a. Between and before a pair of gulars, as in pleurodirans. II. n. An unpaired anterior horny shield of the plastron of a pleurodirous tortoise.—in"ter-he'mal. Anat. I. a. Situated or occurring between the hemal arches or spines of a vertebra. II. n. Ich. One of the bones to which the rays of the anal fin are attached. in"ter-he'mal".—aggregated interhemal, a hypural.—in"ter-hem'i-sphe're, n. Anat. Situated between the hemispheres of the brain. in"ter-hem'i-spha'ral.—in"ter-hy'al. Anat. I. a. Situated between the parts of the hyoid arch. II. n. An interhyal bone or cartilage.

in"ter-im, 1 in"ter-im; 2 in"ter-im, n. 1. An intermediate season; time between acts or periods; mean time: used also attributively, and formerly as an adverb. 2. Ch. Hist. One of the provisional adjustments between the German Protestants and the Roman Catholic Church proposed in the time of the Reformation, as that of Ratisbon, 1541, that of Augsburg, 1548, and that of Leipzig, 1548. [L., < inter: see INTER-.]—interim certificate (Finance), a preliminary or provisional certificate, as one giving the holder ownership of bonds, etc., not yet issued.—in"ter-im-ist, n. Ch. Hist. A Protestant who accepted or advocated the Interims.—in"ter-im-is'tic, a. in"ter-im-is'ti-cal';.—in"ter-im-is'ti-cal-ly, adv.

in"ter-im-pe'ri-al, a. Between or among empires.—in"ter-in'cement, n. [Rare.] Formal approval; ratification.

in-ter-in-a'tion†.—in"ter-i-on'ic, a. Operating between ions.

in-te'ri-or, 1 in-tĭ'ri-or or-ēr; 2 in-tē'ri-or, a. 1. Existing or occurring within an enclosure, boundary, or substance, or between limits; internal; inner; not exterior; as, the interior space of a sphere; an interior view. 2. Of or pertaining to an inclosure or to something within; as, interior dimensions. 3. Remote from the coast or frontier; inland; as, an interior city. 4. Astron. Having an orbit within the earth's: said of certain planets. 5. Of a private or confidential nature; pertaining to the domestic affairs or relations in business; hidden. 6. Of or pertaining to spiritual matters; not worldly. 7. Pertaining to the immediate contents of consciousness; mentally inward; belonging to the field of self-consciousness. [OF., < L. interior, compar. of inter; see INTER-.]

in-te'ri-or, n. 1. The internal part; the inside; as, the interior of a cavern. 2. The inland or central region of a country, as remote from the exterior. 3. The inside of a church, temple, palace, cottage, or room as reproduced in genre pictures, perspective views, Flemish paintings, and the like. 4. Theat. A painted scene representing the inside of a dwelling, etc. 5. The domestic affairs of a country; home ministry: a department of the government.

In the United States the Secretary of the Interior has the care and management of the United States national parks, pensions, the Indians, the Patent Office, the Office of Education, the Geological Survey, and the Reclamation Service.

6. The internal nature; the character of a thing.

—in-te'ri-or'i-ty, n. The state of being interior. in-te'ri-or-ness†.

in-te'ri-or-ly, 1 in-tĭ'ri-or-li; 2 in-tē'ri-or-ly, adv. In an interior manner or direction; inwardly.

Interiorly most people enjoy the inferiority of their best friends.
CHESTERFIELD Letters p. 332. [c. 1881.]

inter-j., abbr. Interjection.

in"ter-je'cen-cy, n. The state of being between, or that which lies between. in"ter-ja'cence†.—in"ter-ja'cent, a. Lying between.—in"ter-ja'cu-late, vt. & vi. To ejaculate in the midst of conversation.—in"ter-jac'u-la-to-ry, a. Incidentally ejaculated or interposed.

in"ter-jan'gle, etc. See INTER-.

in"ter-ject', 1 in"ter-jekt'; 2 in"ter-jĕct', v. I. t. To throw or put between; introduce abruptly; insert; as, to interject an oath into a conversation. II. i. To throw oneself between; interpose. [< L. interjectus, pp. of intericio, < inter (see INTER-) + jacio, throw.]—in"ter-jec'tion, n. [ME. interjeccioun, < OF. interjection, < L. interjectio.] 1. Gram. The part of speech that expresses sudden emotion, strong feeling, as, oh! alas! hurrah!

Interjections . . . are no real part of language; they do not enter into the build or organism of a sentence. J. M. D. MEIKLEJOHN English Language p. 95. [LLOYD, 1886.]

in"ter-jec'tion-al, 1 in"ter-jek'shon-al; 2 in"ter-jĕk'shon-al, a. Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of an interjection.

in"ter-rupt', 1 in'tər-rupt'; 2 in"te-rŭpt', v. I. t. To obstruct or hinder by breaking in upon the course or progress of; break the current, continuity, or succession of; cause a break or delay in; as, to interrupt the debate with a question; to interrupt a line of railway; bring to an abrupt end; break up; as, the meeting was interrupted by a fight.

The remonstrance of David Hume was the first thing which many years ago interrupted my dogmatic slumbers.

Caird Kant vol. i, p. 201. (MACM. 1889.)

3. To vary the monotony or sameness of; diversify; also, to obstruct; as, a forest interrupts the view.

II. i. To break in upon an action or speech; to interpolate. [< L. interruptus, pp. of interrumpo, < inter (see INTER-) + rumpo, break.]

Syn.: intercept. Intercept is applied to an object that may be seized or stopped while in transit; as, to intercept a letter or a messenger; interrupt is applied to an action which might or should be continuous, but is broken in upon (L. rumpere, to break) by some disturbing power; as, the conversation was interrupted.—Ant.: check; hinder; obstruct; aid; continue, maintain, persist, sustain.—in"ter-rupt'-ing-ly, adv.—in"ter-rup'ter-y, a.—in"ter-rupt'ra-ble, a.

in"ter-rupt'ed, 1 in'tə-rupt'ed; 2 in"te-rŭpt'ĕd, pa. Broken in upon; irregular; especially, in botany and zoology, suddenly or irregularly ceasing in the normal continuity broken.—interrupted cadence, i. screw, etc. See the nouns.—in"ter-rupt'ed-ly, adv.—interrupted-pinnate (Bot.), pinnate with smaller leaflets intermixed with the larger ones; pinnate with a striking inequality among the leaflets.

in"ter-rupt'er, 1 in'tə-rupt'ər; 2 in"te-rŭpt'ėr, n. One who or that which interrupts. Specif.: (1) Elec. A device, usually automatic, for rapidly and frequently breaking and making an electric circuit. See also vibrator. (2) Mil. An electrical device, in connection with a chronoscope, for causing a pencil to register the exact time of passage of a projectile through a screen.—interrupter of the upper interrupter (Elec.), a self-acting or hand-worked interrupter in which an electrode is made to plunge in and out of mercury.—electrolytic i., a form of interrupter in which the circuit is broken and reestablished at regular intervals because of the periodic production by the current of an insulating gas and of its removal because of its buoyancy.—Foucault i. (Elec.), an interrupter utilizing a contact-spring which closes the circuit through two containers of mercury, into which it dips, this contact being broken by the action of an electromagnet upon the spring, which causes the reciprocating the oscillatory motion.—interrupter clock (Elec.), a device which interrupts a circuit at stated intervals and operated by clock-work.—Neef's i., a device consisting of a rotating and conducting toothed wheel with its teeth forming a contact with a jet of mercury. The contact is interrupted each time that the jet passes through the space between consecutive teeth.—Reuelly's i., a device which registers the motions of the larynx.—static i. (Elec.), a device used for the protection of high tension apparatus from the results of surges in the connected lines.—string i. (Elec.), one which closes and opens a circuit by means of a vibrating string.—turbine i. (Elec.), one in which a centrifugal pump throws a jet of mercury against a moving plate, thus furnishing a path for the current, the circuit being made or broken by means of a motor-driven toothed wheel.—vapor i. (Physics), an interrupter in which a jet of mercury are in vacuo.—Wehnelt i. (Elec.), one formed by an electrolytic cell containing dilute sulfuric acid, in which a lead plate and a platinum wire are immersed. The electrolysis set up is produced by the passage of a current due to 25 to 80 volts causes a rapidly intermittent action within the cell which supplies the needed interruptions.

in"ter-rup'tion, 1 in'tər-rup'shən; 2 in"te-rŭp'shon, n. 1. The act of interrupting; a breaking in or cutting off; abrupt disturbance or stoppage; as, your interruption was pardonable. 2. The state of being interrupted or broken; breach in continuity; an interval. 3. Obstruction caused by breaking in upon any course, progress, or motion; hindrance; stop; check; as, interruption to one's meditations. 4. Scots Law. The legal step necessary to terminate a period of prescription; exception or reply against prescription. 5. An intermission; a temporary

in"ter-rup'tive, } 1. in"te-rup'tiv; 2 in"te-rŭp'tiv. a.
in"ter-rup'tive, } Tending to interrupt. Tending to interrupt.
—in"ter-rup'tiv-ly, adv.

in"ter-sa'cral, 1 in"ter-sē'krĕl; 2 in"tĕr-sē'kral, a. Anat. Situated between the segments of the sacrum.

in"ter-sa-lute', etc. See INTER-.

in"ter-scalm, 1 in"ter-skälm; 2 in"ter-skälm, n. Rom. Antiq. The space between any two adjacent oars in a galley. [< L. interscalmium, < inter (see INTER-) + scalmus (< Gr. skalmos), thole-pin.]

in"ter-scap'u-lar, 1 in"tar-skap'yu-lar; 2 in"ter-scăp'yu-lar, a. Anat. & Zool. 1. Situated between the scapulæ or shoulder-blades. 2. Of or pertaining to the part between the shoulder-blades; as, an interscapular feather. In"ter-scap'u-la-ry†.

in"ter-scap'u-lar, n. Ecclin. A plate of the third ring of the calyx of some Cystoidea. 2. An intersacapular feather. —in"ter-scap'u-lum, n. [-LÆ, pl.] The intersacapular region. in"ter-sca-pu'lum, } in"ter-scen'dent, a. Alg. Containing radicals in the exponents: said of an expression.

in"ter-scen-den'tal,—in"ter-scăn-las'tic, a. Taking place between schools.—in"ter-scean', vt. [Rare.] To sprinkle; scatter; adorn with something sprinkled, as, interscanned with lilies.

in"ter-sc'eant. [Rare.] I. a. Dividing; intersecting. II. n. That which is intersecant. [< L. interscant-(s), ppr. of intersceo, cut off, < inter (see INTER-) + seco, cut.]

in"ter-sect', 1 in"ter-sekt'; 2 in"ter-sĕct', v. I. t. To pass across; cut through; divide; cross; as, a line intersecting another at right angles. 2. Geom. To pass through (a line or surface) so as to lie on both sides and have one point in common. 3. [Rare.] To separate by coming between.

II. i. 1. To cross each other; as, two streets intersect. 2. Logic. To be partially included; as, concepts intersect when the extension of the one coincides only in part with the extension of the other. [< L. intersectus, pp. of intersco; see INTERSCEANT.] —intersecting line, l. point, see PERSPECTIVE.

in"ter-sect', n. Math. The point or curve of intersection. —in"ter-sec'tant, n. [Rare.] Crossing; intersecting.

in"ter-sec'tion, 1 in"ter-sek'shan; 2 in"ter-sĕc'shon, n. 1. The act of intersecting, or the state of being intersected.

Nave and transept met in fondest intersection. F. W. GUNSAULUS Monk and Knight vol. i, p. 135. [sec. & c. 1891.]

2. A place of crossing; specif. (Math.), the point where two lines or the line in which two surfaces cross each other, or the points common to two aggregates. Intersections between two lines or two curves are points, between two planes are lines, between two surfaces are lines and points, and in general between a line and a surface are points, and between a surface and a volume are surfaces.

3. Logic. The relation between two classes each of which partly includes and partly excludes the other. [< L. intersectio(n-), < intersectus; see INTERSECANT.]

—in"ter-sec'tion-al, a. Pertaining to or constituting intersection.

in"ter-seg-men'tal, a. Zool. Situated between two segments.—in"ter-seg-men'tal-ly, adv.—in"ter-sem'i-nal, a. Lying between or among seeds, as the tree-scales in the enveloping leaves of cycadeous fossils.

in"ter-sen'i-nate, etc. See INTER-.

in"ter-sert', vt. To set or place in between other things; insert.—In"ter-ser'tal, a. Petrol. Occupying the interstices between the crystals of a more mature set, as the augite in some diabases. [< INTER- + L. sero, weave.]—intersertal texture, a variety of the diabasic texture in which the plagioclase crystals are in part in the augite, the latter being formed in the spaces between the lath-shaped crystals of the former: contrasted with ophitic texture.—in"ter-ser'tion, n.—in"ter-set', vt. [Rare.] To place or set between or among.—in"ter-shock', v. I. i. [Rare.] To attack mutually. —Interstate Commerce Act [U. S.], an act of Congress regulating interstate commerce carried either wholly or partly by rail. It was passed on Feb. 4, 1887, and has been since amended on several occasions. It subjects all common carriers to its regulations, prohibits special rates to individuals, undue preference to any special locality or description of traffic, forbids pooling of traffic and dividing profits, rebates, etc. It provides that all rates shall be published and that no change or departure from such published rate shall be made without due notice. It established the Interstate Commerce Commission to execute and enforce the act.—Interstate Commission [U. S.], a commission instituted by the Interstate Commerce Act, the members of which, originally five, but increased in 1906 to seven, are appointed by the President, and jointly execute and enforce the provisions of that act. The commission have power to require reports from all railroads engaged in interstate commerce, to hear complaints, to make investigations concerning any infringement of the act, to inquire into the management and inspect the accounts of any corporation under its jurisdiction. It can compel the attendance of witnesses at any of its investigations. In addition to all corporations doing business as common carriers, the telegraph, telephone, and cable companies are subject to its jurisdiction. On June 18, 1910, a Commerce Court was created by act of Congress, to have exclusive jurisdiction over controversies relating to the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission and to the prevention of unjust discrimination by carriers. The court consists of five circuit judges, designated and assigned thereto by the Chief Justice of the United States for a term of five years. Appeals may be taken to the United States Supreme Court.

in"tu-i'ti-ve, [Rare.] The possession of intuition.

in"tu-it, 1 in'tu-it; 2 in"tū-it, v. I. t. To know by intuition.

We cannot resist belief in an intuition, though we may doubt whether the relations intuited be real or not. LEWES Problems of Life and Mind, Psychol. Prin. vol. i, p. 157. [d. a. co. 1874.]

II. i. To acquire knowledge intuitively. [< L. intuitus, pp. of intueor, look on, < in, on, + tueor, look.]

in"tu-i'tion, 1 in"tu-ish'on; 2 in"tū-ĭsh'on, n. 1. Quick perception of truth without conscious attention or reasoning, or the power of such perception; knowledge from within; instinctive knowledge or feeling; as, woman's intuition.

Genius works by a process of conscious reasoning than by a flash of intuition, and less by abstract conception than by a prophetic beholding of results. C. C. EVERETT Poetry and Duty, Imagination p. 1. [c. p. p. 1888.]

2. Philos. An immediate knowledge, or envisagement, of an object, truth, or principle, whether of a physical, rational, artistic, or ethical nature; a conception discerned by analogy from the data of observation and concentrated vision. In scholastic philosophy in'uition was employed — notably by St. Anselm — to distinguish the knowledge of finite things from a knowledge of God, which comes, not by speculation or by perception, but by a rational and immediate or "face-to-face" presentation. Knowledge by intuition is distinguished from discursive knowledge, or knowledge by the reasoning way, mysticism claims to have an intuition of God. Recently, intuition is more commonly applied to such truths as appear, when we look into them, or intuit their nature, to carry their evidence in themselves and not to require proof of the truths for their claim to acceptance. See phrases below and INTUITIONALISM.

3. That which is known intuitively; truth obtained by internal apprehension without the aid of perception or the reasoning powers. 4†. A looking on; visual perception. [< LL. intuitio(n-), < L. intueor; see INTUIT.]

SYN.: see KNOWLEDGE.

—Intellectual intuition, the immediate knowledge which Schelling claimed for his identity theory.—the tests of I. (Philos.) the principles by which intuitions are verified — self-evidence, necessity, and catholicity or universality. See INDUCTIVE VERIFICATION, under INDUCTIVE.

—in"tu-i'tion-al, a. Of or pertaining to intuition.—intuitional ethics, the teaching of that school of ethics which holds that man has an intuitive apprehension and intrinsically valid judgment of moral values.—in"tu-i'tion-al-ly, adv.—in"tu-i'tion-al-ness, n.

in"tu-i'tion-al-ism, 1 in"tu-ish'on-al-izm; 2 in"tū-ĭsh'on-al-ĭsm, n. The doctrine that certain truths are immediately, and without discursive argument, cognized as fundamental and necessitated; in the Scottish school, that objects of sense-perception are intuitively known as real; in the schools of Kichte and Schelling, that the Absolute is thus immediately cognized.

—in"tu-i'tion-al-ist, n. An advocate of intuitionalism.

in"tu-i'tion-ism, 1 in"tiu-ish'en-izm; 2 in"tū-ish'on-ĭsm, n. Intuitionalism, or an extreme form of it. —in"tu-i'tion-ist, n. An advocate of intuitionism.—in"tu-i'tion-is'tic, a.

in-tu'i-tive,] 1 in-tiu'i-tiv; 2 in-tū'ĭ-tiv, a. 1. Perceived in-tu'i-tive,] by the mind immediately, or without the intervention of any process of thought; having the character of an intuition; as, intuitive evidence. 2. Seeing immediately and clearly; discovering truth or reaching a just conclusion without resort to the reasoning powers; as, the intuitive faculty.

There is none of that intuitive phase when the imagination at a touch precipitates thought, feeling, and image in an imperishable crystal. LOWELL Latest Essays, Gray p. 17. [n. s. c. 20, 1882] in"tu-mesce',] in"tu-mes';] in"tū-mēs', vi. [-MESCED'; -MESC'ING.] To enlarge or expand, as from the action of heat; swell; turnefy. in-u'tile,] in-yū'til; 2 in-yŭ'tīl, a. Unprofitable; useless. — in-u'tile-ly, adv.

3. Acquired by intuition; as, intuitive knowledge. 4. Cognizable by intuition. 5. Intuitional. 6. In spiritualism, denoting consciousness by a medium of the messages it transmits. 7. [Rare.] Perceivable. [< LL. intuitivus, < L. intuitus; see INTUITE.] — in-tu"i-tiv(e-ly), adv. — in-tu"i-tiv(e-ness), n. — in-tu"i-tiv-ism, n. The doctrine that all ethical principles are intuitive. — in-tu"i-tiv-ist, n.

in"u-til-i-ty,] in'yu-til'i-tı; 2 in'yŭ-tīl'i-tı, n. [-TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tiz, pl.] The quality of being useless or profitless; unprofitableness. 2. [Rare.] A thing that is useless or profitless.

in-u'til-ized, a. Not utilized. in-u'til-ized†.

in-ut'ter-a-bl(e), a. Unutterable.

in"u-us,] in'yu-us; 2 in'yŭ-ŭs, n. [L.] Rom. Relig. A shepherd divinity with whom the Romans identified Pan.

in"vā-dor', Inventor; inventer; invoke.

in-vac'ci-nate, vt. [Rare.] To inoculate or communicate by vaccination. — in-vac'ci-na"tion, n.

in-vac'u-ate,] in vak'yu-āt; 2 in văk'yŭ-āt. [L.] In a vacuum.

in-vade',] in-vēd'; 2 in-vād', v. [IN-VAD'ED; IN-VAD'ING.]

I. t. 1. To enter with an armed force with hostile intent, as for the purpose of conquering or plundering; make a descent or attack upon; as, the Saxons invaded Britain. 2. To encroach upon; infringe upon; violate; as, to invade the privacy of a person; the disease invades the lungs. 3. To grow in or over; affect gradually; as, pus invades the wound. 4. To enter.

II. i. To encroach or make an invasion. [< L. invado, < in, into, + vado, go.] SYN.: see ATTACK; ENTER. — in-vad'a-bl(e), a. Capable of invasion.

in-vad'er,] in-vēd'er; 2 in-vād'er, n. One who invades; an intruder.

in va'di-o,] in vā'di-ō; 2 in vā'di-ō. [L.] Law. In pledge.

in-va'gi-na-ble,] in-vaj'i-nə-bl; 2 in-văj'i-nə-bl, a. Capable of being invaginated.

in-vag'i-nate,] in-vaj'i-nēt; 2 in-văj'i-nāt, v. [-NAT'ED; -NAT'ING.] I. t. To put or receive into or as into a sheath, as one part of a thing into another; ensheathe; introvert. Compare EVAGINATE.

A part of the wall of the hollow sphere becomes invaginated, so that . . . a cup . . . is produced.

E. A. SCHÄFER in Encyc. Brit. 9th ed., vol. xii, p. 4.

II. i. To be subjected to invagination. [< IN-¹ + L. vagina, sheath.] — in-vag'i-nate, a. Invaginated.

in-vag'i-na-ted,] in-vaj'i-nē'ted; 2 in-văj'i-nā'tĕd, pa. Received into and lain in a sheath, as one part within another; introverted.

in-vag"i-na'tion,] in-vaj'i-nē'shon; 2 in-văj'i-nā'shon, n. 1. The act of invaginating, or the state of being invaginated. 2. Intussusception. Specif., embryology, the differentiation of the germinal layers (1) by a pushing in of one half of the blastosphere toward the other (embolic invagination, or 2) by the growth of the epiblast-cells as a thin layer over the hypoblast (epibolic I.).

2. That which is invaginated; specif., in embryology, a pouch formed by an infolding of a membrane; as, the bronchial invagination by which the mouth is formed.

in-vag'i-na"tor,] in-vaj'i-nā'tor or -ter; 2 in-văj'i-nā'tor, n. Surg. A cylindrical instrument used in hernlotomy. [< L. vagina, sheath.]

in-va'les-cence†, n. Health or strength.

in"va-les'cence, n. Lack of health.

in-va'lid,] in'və-lid or -lēd; 2 in'vă-lĭd or -lēd, n. Ailing; unhealthy. [< L. invalet(udi)narius, < in, thoroughly; and see VALETUDINARY.]

in'va-lid,] in'və-lid or -lēd; 2 in'vă-lĭd or -lēd, a. I. t. 1. Sick; infirm; weak. 2. Of or for invalids; as, an invalid carriage. 3. [Rare.] To become an invalid; disable by illness or injury. 3. [Rare.] To invalidate.

II. i. [Rare.] To become enrolled as an invalid.

in-val'id†,] in-val'id; 2 in-văl'id, a. Having no force, weight, or cogency; void; null; not good; as, an invalid argument.

Gallia must be decided that the act is invalid. WEBSTER Works, Ogden vs. Saunders in vol. vi, p. 25. [n. d. & co. 1858.]

in-va-lid',] in'və-lid or -lēd; 2 in'vă-lĭd or -lēd, a. Enfeebled or disabled by ill health; infirm; sickly. [< F. invalide, < L. invalidus; see INVALID'.] in'va-lid'et. — in'va-lid-ism, n. Invalidism.

in'va-lid,] in'və-lid or -lēd; 2 in'vă-lĭd or -lēd (XIII), n. One who is disabled by illness or injury; a sickly or feeble person; specifically a soldier or sailor disabled through wounds, disease, or illness. in'va-lidet.

Old soldiers are called invalids who are no longer able to bear the fatigues of warfare. CRABB English Synonymes.

in-val'i-date,] in-val'i-dēt; 2 in-văl'i-dāt, vt. [-DAT'ED; -DAT'ING.] To weaken or destroy the force or validity of; render invalid or of no force or effect, especially of no legal force; as, to invalidate a claim, argument or a will.

in-val'i-da"tion, — in-val'i-da"tor, n.

in'va-lid-ism,] in'və-lid-izm; 2 in'vă-lĭd-izm, n. The condition of being an invalid; long-continued or chronic infirmity. in'va-lid-ism†.

in"va-lid'i-ty,] in'və-lid'i-tı; 2 in'vă-lĭd'i-tı, n. 1. The state of being invalid; lack of force, especially of legal force.

The invalidity of the marriage [of Henry VIII. and Catherine of Arragon]. E. LODGE Portraits vol. i, p. 126. [n. d. s. 1849.]

2†. Infirmity. [< LL. invalidita(t-)s, < L. invalidus; see INVALID.]

in-val'u-a-bl(e),] in-val'yu-ə-bl; 2 in-văl'yu-ə-bl, a. So in-val'u-a-bly,] valuable as to be above estimation; exceedingly precious; inestimable. in-val'ued†. [Archaic.]

Boston! Thoroughgoing merchant was invaluable to Jackson. T. ROOSEVELT T. H. Benton p. 114. [n. m. & co. 1887.]

in-va'lue-ble, a. Of no value; valueless.

in-var',] in-vär'; 2 in-văr'. n. An alloy of nickel and steel, containing 36 per cent. of nickel, employed in the manufacture of instruments of precision and of standard measures, because it is practically free from expansion or contraction by heat or cold. [< INVARIABLE.]

in-va'ri-a-ble,] in-vā'ri-ə-bl; 2 in-vā'ri-ə-bl, a. That does not or cannot vary or be varied; constant in the same state; always uniform; unchangeable; as, invariable temperature. N. S. SHALER Aspects of Earth p. 116. [s. 1889.] SYN.: see CHANGELESS; CONTINUAL; PERMANENT. — in-va'ri-a-bil'i-ty, n. The quality of being invariable; unchangeableness. in-va'ri-a-bl(e-ness†, — in-va'ri-a-bly, adv.

in-va'ri-ant,] in-vā'ri-ənt; 2 in-vā'ri-ənt, a. 1. Constant; not subject to variation. 2. Math. Of or pertaining to an invariant. 3. Phys. Chem. Referring to a variance equivalent to zero. It is expressed in the equation $V = c - p + 2$, in which c stands for the number of independent components and p for the number of phases in which the chemical system may exist. — invariant subgroup (Math.), a subgroup coinciding with all its conjugates.

in-va'ri-ant,] in-vē'ri-ənt; 2 in-vā'ri-ənt, n. 1. That which remains unchanged tho its constituents may vary; specif. (Alg.), a function of the coefficients of one or more quantics such that, if the variables be subjected to a linear transformation, the corresponding function of the new coefficients is equal to the original function multiplied by some power of the modulus of transformation. 2. Math. (1) In a linear complex, the expression $2(C_1C_4 + C_2C_5 + C_3C_6)$, the C's indicating the coefficients of the line coordinates in the equation. (2) A solution of the group-equation $uf = 0$, which does not depend upon y' and y''. (3) An equation whose form undergoes no change when submitted to a group of transformations. — absolute invariant (Math.), an invariant that is not affected by a linear substitution of the quantic. — differential I., an invariant of a transformation group whose working is extended to the original variables x and y, as well as to successive derivations y', y'', etc. — I. of a concurrence (Math.), the discriminant of the quadratic invariant of a linear complex. — natural I., that form of invariant which results from the nature of the component factors. — in-va'ri-ance, n. Math. The quality of being an invariant. in-va'ri-an-cy, n. [-CIES.] — in-va'ri-an-tive, a. Of, pertaining to, or being an invariant. — in-va'ri-an-tiv(e-ly), adv.

in-va'rid,] in-vē'rid; 2 in-vā'rid, a. [Rare.] Unvaried.

in-va'roid,] in-vē'roid; 2 in-vā'rōid, n. Math. Any one of various ultracritical functions of the calculus analogous to the invariant of algebra. [< INVARIANT + -OID.] in-va'ri-oid†.

in-va'sion,] in-vā'zhon; 2 in-vā'zhon, n. 1. The act of invading; entrance into a country or territory with hostile intent; a military inroad or incursion for conquest or plunder. 2. Hence, any attack with harmful intent or result; as, an invasion of disease. 3. Encroachment, as by an act of intrusion or trespass; as, the invasion of privacy.

Their only protection was to be sought in a bold invasion of the royal prerogative.

T. E. MAY Democracy in Europe vol. ii, p. 411. [A. s. s. 1899.]

in-va'sive,] in-vā'siv; 2 in-vā'sĭv, a. [Having the character of or effect of an invasion; encroaching; aggressive. [< LL. invasivus, < L. invasus, pp. of invado; see INVADE.]

in-vec'ked, a. Same as INVECTED.

in-veck'ed,] in-vek'ĕd; 2 in-vĕk'ĕd, a. Her. Invected.

in-vect'ı, vt. To inveigh.

in-vec'ta et il-la'ta,] in-vek'tə et i-lā'tə; 2 in-vĕk'tə ĕt i-lā'tə. [L.] Scots & Civil Law. Denoting possessions that a tenant or his agent has brought with him, as tools, household chattels, etc., which are subject to a lien of the landlord for rent; literally, things carried in and brought in.

in-vect'ed,] in-vekt'ed, in-vekt'; 2 in-vĕct'ĕd, in-vĕkt', a. in-wecked', Her. & Arch. Having a border-line consisting of a series of curves and counter-curves, scallops; consisting of such arcs, as a line, the edge on a molding, or the like: opposed to engrailed. [< L. invectus, pp. of invehо, bring in, < in, in, + veho, carry.]

in-vec'tive,] in-vek'tiv; 2 in-vĕc'tĭv, a. in-vec'tive,] Using or characterized by invective or abuse; railing. — in-vec'tive(-ly, adv. — in-vec'tive(-ness†, n.

in-vec'tive, n. Utterance, or an utterance, intended to cast opprobrium, censure, or reproach; railing accusation; virulent denunciation. [< F. invectif, < L. invectivus, scolding, < invectus; see INVECTED.] in-vec'tion†. — in-vec'tiv-list, n. One who uses invective. — in-vec'tor, n. [Rare.] An inveigher.

in-veigh',] in-vē'; 2 in-vē', v. I. t. [Rare.] 1. To take away; also, to bring in or introduce. 2. To denounce.

II. i. To utter vehement censure or invective; speak reproachfully or with denunciation; rail: with against.

Chesterfield, whose polish'd pen inveighs
'Gainst laughter. BYRON Hints from Horace st. 34.

in-veighd, pp. Inveighed. S. S.

in-vei'gle,] in-vē'gl or -vā'gl; 2 in-vē'gl or -vā'gl, vt. [-GLED; -GLING.] To persuade into or cause unwise act by deceptive arts or flattery; lead astray by hoodwinking; wheedle; entice.

After vainly trying to inveigle Locke into a fault, the government resolved to punish him without one.

MACAULAY Essays, John Locke in vol. iii, p. 416. [p. & c. 1879.]

in-veil',] in-vēl'; 2 in-vāl', vt. To cover with a veil; envell.

in-vel'op†, in-vel'ope†, vt. Same as ENVELOP.

in-ven-ci'bl(e),] in'ven-sē'bl; 2 in'vĕn-sī'bl, n. [Sp.] A long cigar with tapering ends.

in-ve'ment, a. [Rare.] Meeting or coming upon.

in-ven'dı, in-ven'dor†, vt. Same as INVENT.

in-vent',] in-vent'; 2 in-vĕnt', vt. 1. To find out, as a new means, instrument, or method; contrive by ingenuity; discover in art; devise first; originate; distinguished from discover; as, Galileo invented a form of telescope.

Why did none of them [philosophers] claim the reward, which Xerxes promised to him who should invent a new pleasure?

HOWELL Essays, The Epicurean p. 80. [w. l. & co.]

2. To fabricate in the mind; concoct; devise; as, to invent a falsehood; he invented an excuse.

It is hardly possible . . . to invent a story which, if closely compared with all the actual contemporaneous occurrences, may not be shown to be false. GREENLEAF Evidence vol. i, ch. 3, § 12.

3. [Archaic.] To come or chance upon; find; discover. 4†. To found; originate. [< F. inventer, < L. inventus, pp. of invenio, discover, < in, on, + venio, come.] SYN.: see DISCOVER. — in-vent'ful†, a. Full of invention. — in-vent'i-bil'i-ty, n. — in-vent'i-bl(e), a. Capable of being invented. in-vent'a-bl(e)†. — in-vent'i-bl(e-ness†, n. — in-ven'tor, n. One who invents; especially, one who has originated some notable mechanical device, or who de-

in-ven'tion, 1 in-ven'shon; 2 in-vĕn'shon, n. 1. The act or process of inventing or finding out some new thing or way; origination; as, the invention of the cotton-gin. American prairies are at least a partial explanation of the invention of the steam-plow.

R. T. ELY Intro. to Polit. Econ. p. 31. (CHAUT. 1889.)

2. That which is invented; as, a useful invention.

The Supreme Court has been hard hit by De Tocqueville and other writers to be a brilliant American invention.

J. K. HOSMER Anglo-Saxon Freedom p. 241. (c. 1890.)

Invention, as applied to literary undertakings, comprehends the various procedures involved in collecting, sifting, and ordering the material of discourse.

GENUNG Practical Rhetoric p. 217. (c. & co. 1888.)

6. Mus. A short and simple piece of music in contrapuntal style. 7. [Archaic.] A finding; discovery; as, the invention of the Cross. See CROSS. [< L. invention-(n.) < invenīre: see INVENT.] SYN.: see FICTION; INGENUITY; PROJECT. Compare synonyms under DISCOVERY.—in-ven'tion-al, a. Relating to invention.—in-ven'tion-less, a.

in-ven'tive, 1 in-ven'tiv; 2 in-vĕn'tiv, a. 1. Able to invent; inventing; quick at contrivance; ready at expedients; ingenious.

No slave-holding people ever were an inventive people.

HENRY GEORGE Progress and Poverty p. 473. [ib. c.]

2. Pertaining to or showing invention or contrivance; as, inventive skill. [< F. inventif, < inventer; see INVENT.] in-ven'tional, a.—ly, adv.—ness, n.

in'ven-to"ry, 1 in'ven-tō"ri; 2 in'vĕn-tō"ry, n. [-RIED, -ry-ING.] To make an inventory or schedule of; also, to insert in an inventory.

Virgil is making out the balance-sheet of Italy, he is inventory-ing her wealth. J. WILSON Dies Borealis iii, p. 132. [A. RY. 1850.]

in'ven-to"ry, n. [-RIES, 1 -ri-z; 2 -ri-s, pl.] 1. A detailed account, catalog, or schedule, as of the property of a deceased person, articles of merchandise, and the like; as, an inventory of household furniture; an inventory in fire insurance, a list, with valuations, of articles covered by a policy of insurance. 2. Articles which constitute or are to constitute the inventory. [< LL. inventarium, < L. inventus; see INVENT.] in'vent'ari.—in"ven-to'ri-al, a.—in"ven-to'ri-al-ly, adv.

in"ve-ra'ci-ty, etc. See IN-8.

In"ver-a'ry, 1 in"ver-ā'ri; 2 in"vĕr-ā'ry, n. A royal and municipal burgh, county-seat of Argyllshire, Scotland. It has a castle, the seat of the dukes of Argyll.

In"ver-ber"vie, n. Same as BERVIE.

In"ver-car'gill, 1 in'vĕr-kā"ɡil; 2 in"ver-cär'ɡil, n. A manufacturing town in South Island, New Zealand.

In"ver-ell, 1 in'ver-el; 2 in"ver-ĕl, n. A town in New South Wales.

in-ver'ji-si-mil'i-tude, 1 in-ver'i-si-mil'i-tūd; 2 in-vĕr'i-si-mil'i-tūd, n. Want of verisimilitude; improbability.

In"ver-ket'thing, 1 in"ver-ket'hing, n. A village in the parliamentary, royal, and municipal burgh in Fifeshire, Scotland.

In"ver-lei'then, n. Same as INVERLEITHEN.

In"ver-loch'y, 1 in"ver-lo-ki"; 2 in"ver-lŏ'ky, n. A ruined castle in Inverness-shire, Scotland; scene of Montrose's victory over the Covenanters under Argyll, Feb. 2, 1645.

In"ver-nate, 1 in"ver-nāt"nu-ət; 2 in-vĕr'ni-nāt, vt. [Rare.] To infest as a worm.

The visible globe which we inverminate.

COLERIDGE Works, Church and State iv. vol. v, p. 135. [R. 1858.]

—in-ver"mi-na'tion, n. Pathol. The state of being afflicted with worms.

In"ver-ness', 1 in"ver-nes'; 2 in"ver-nĕs', n. A sleeveless cloak like garment falling closely over the neck and shoulders loosely over the shoulders. [< Inverness, Scot.] Inverness cape.

In"ver-ness', n. 1. A parliamentary, royal, and municipal burgh; seaport and market-town; county-seat of Inverness-shire, Scotland; capital of the Northern Highlands; an ancient city. 2. A district in Nova Scotia, Canada; 1405 sq. m. 3. A town in the same district.

In"ver-ness'-shire, 1 in"ver-nes'-shir; 2 in"ver-nĕs'-shir, n. A maritime county in N. W. Scotland, mostly mountainous; 4,211 sq. m.; county-seat, Inverness. In"ver-ness'-s.

in-vers'a-bil(e²), 1 in-vûr'sə-bil; 2 in-vĕrs'ə-bil, a. Conchol. Capable of being inverted. [moving.

in-ver'sa-ill(e²), 1 in-vûr'sə-sil; 2 in-vĕr'sə-ĭl, a. Entom. Not

in-verse', 1 in-vûrs'; 2 in-vĕrs' (XIII), a. 1. Opposed in order or effect; contrary in sequence or direction; inverted: opposed to direct; as, to name things chosen in the inverse order of preference. 2. Math. Designating an operation that annuls the effect of another operation; used with reference to any two operations which leave a quantity unaltered after they have been performed upon it in succession and whose relation to each other is such that the antecedent or starting-point of either is the conclusion or result of the other, thus, division is the inverse of multiplication, the extraction of roots is the inverse of the raising of powers, etc. Operations which produce definite and possible results or combine quantities in a symmetrical manner, as addition, multiplication, differentiation, and involution, are known as direct, while their opposites, subtraction, division, integration, and evolution are termed inverse. As a rule there are two inverse operations corresponding to every direct operation, as in the case of the expression F (a, b), the inverse operations are those which give x from F (x, b) and b, and b from F (a, b) and a, respectively. [F., < L. inversus, pp. of invertō; see INVERT.]

—inverse center, difference, etc., see under CENTER, DIFFERENCE, etc.—1. figures, points, etc. (Geom.), figures, etc., related by inversion. See INVERSION.—1. method of tangents, a method of finding a curve when its tangent is given.—1. or reciprocal proportion or ratio, a proportion or ratio derived from another by inverting the order of terms or taking their reciprocals: said especially of the values of related quantities under different circumstances; as, with the same momentum velocity is in inverse proportion to mass. If v, v' and m, m are two velocities and the corresponding masses, this means that v : v' :: m' : m, or v : v' :: 1/m : 1/m'.

There is a race of men, whose courage is always in an inverse ratio to their danger. LANDOR Works, Pericles and Aspasia, Pericles to Cleon in vol. ii, p. 59. (c. & BR. 1839.)

in-verse', n. 1. That which is inverse. 2. Math. The result of inversion: a curve or surface produced by inversion. 3. Logic. Same as CONTRAPOSITIVE.

In-vers'ed-ly, adv. [Rare.] Inversely.

In-verse'ly, 1 in-vûrs'li; 2 in-vĕrs'ly, ad. 1. In an inverted order or manner; by or in inverse ratio or proportion.

The values change inversely as general prices; falling as they rise, and rising as they fall.

MILL Political Economy bk. iii, p. 294. [A. 1888.]

in-ver'sion, 1 in-vûr'shon; 2 in-vĕr'shon, n. 1. The act of inverting, or the state of being inverted; change of order so that the first shall become last and the last first; in general, a reversal of the natural order of things.

Nature is the art of the finite, and is therefore of course and always the exact inversion of the infinite.

H. JAMES, SR. Substance and Shadow p. 185. [c. & r. 1863.]

2. Rhet. (1) A reversal of the natural order of words, as placing verbs before their subjects, objects before their verbs, or adverbs and phrases at the head of sentences for the purpose of emphasis, euphony, or rhythm; hyperbaton; as, "silver and gold have I none" is an inversion. (2) A form of discussion that makes use of a speaker's own argument against himself. 3. Math. (1) The performance of an inverse operation. (2) The act of inverting or interchanging two quantities. (3) In permutations, the total number of times that a thing less in order follows one greater in order. Thus, in the arrangement 4, 2, 1, 3, there are four inversions, 4 being followed by 2, 1, and 3, and 2 by 1 and 3 one. (4) Geom. The operation of forming a new figure from a given one by conceiving a line to be drawn from a fixed point C, called the center of inversion, to all points P of the figure, and taking on the lines from C points P' such that CQ × CP = R², R being an assumed fixed length. The points Q form the figure said to be produced by inversion. A circle drawn from C with radius R is the circle of inversion. Also, (5) Alteration of a harmony or melody by inverting the relations of its intervals; also, the arrangement resulting from such change. An interval is said to undergo inversion when its lowest note is raised an octave, and the interval is thus changed from major or augmented intervals become minor or diminished intervals, and the reverse, but perfect intervals do not become imperfect, or dissonant intervals consonant, and the reverse. (2) In counterpoint, the placing of the lower part above the upper part, or the reverse. (3) The transfer of the sustained note from the base to the upper or middle part in a syncopation. (4) The act of assuming as a base of some other than the fundamental tone. See CHORD. (5) In a melody, a reversal of the movement, as in the example. 5. Mil. A reversal of the order of companies in line, so as to bring the left to the right, and vice versa. 6. Geol. The folding over of strata upon themselves so as to upturn, as to reverse the order of succession appears reversed. 7. Chem. A rearrangement of the molecular structure, as in sugars and similar bodies, usually induced by fermentation or by heating with a dilute acid, resulting in the absorption of a molecule of water with the forming of two new compounds hose effect on the plane of polarization is opposed to each other; as, cane-sugar by inversion becomes dextrose and levulose. 8. Phon. The act of turning the tip of the tongue upward and backward, as in the pronunciation of certain consonants, as the smooth r. 9. Logic. Same as CONTRAPOSITION. 10. Kinemat. The changing (data) from one set of centrodes to another by the taking up or adding of a link. 11†. Perversion. [< L. inversiō(n-), < inversus; see INVERSE.] —absolute inversion (Math.), the absolute value of $\frac{a}{x}$ for that or $\frac{x}{a}$. —diurnal 1. of the wind (Meteor.), the rule that at the surface of the earth the wind is weakest during the night and strongest at midday, whereas at a distance above the surface the reverse is the case. —inverse simple harmonic 1. (Phys. Chem. That maximum or minimum position of any curve's owing variations in condition, as volume, velocity, or electrical potential, in that it is opposite in representing an alternating current at which the decreasing impulse of one sign merges into the increasing impulse of the next and opposite sign. —1. point (Geom.) same as inverse (4). —radius of 1., the side of a square whose area equals that of the rectangle of sects from the center of inversion to two inverse points.—rule of 1. (Logic) the rule governing in contradictory conclusions, the rule that the inverse of any one of the terms of that group of theorems which is untrue must necessarily be true.—temperature 1. (Meteor.), a reversal of the normal vertical gradient of temperature in the atmosphere; an increase of temperature with increase of altitude.—thermoelectric 1., the reversal of the thermoelectric current due to a cooling of the hot junction because of the junctions rises above a certain point called the neutral point, which differs for each pair of metals.—upper 1. (Meteor.), same as INFERIOR 1. Inversion Layer in order 1 SUPERIOR.

in-ver'sive, 1 in-vûr'siv; 2 in-vĕr'siv a. Pertaining to in-ver'sive, 1 or causing inversion.—Inversive Magi or Brethren (Occult.), adepts from Tibet; the masters of the Theosophical Society.

in-ver'sor, 1 in-vûr'sor; 2 in-vĕr'sŏr, n. An inverter.

in-vert', 1 in-vûrt'; 2 in-vĕrt', v. I. t. 1. To turn inside out, upside down, or in an opposite direction; reverse. 2. Chem. To change by inversion. 3. Mus. To transpose, as an interval, phrase, voice-part, etc. 4. Mil. To change the order of, as companies in line. 5. Figuratively, to change the meaning or condition of; as, to invert a blessing. 6†. To divert.

II. i. Chem. 1. To change to the opposite; undergo reversion. 2. To undergo inversion. [< L. invertō, < in, in, + vertō, turn.]

in-vert'a-ble, a. Chem. Inverted.

in'vert, 1 in'vûrt; 2 in'vĕrt, n. 1. Arch. An inverted arch or vault, particularly one forming the bottom of a watertight conduit or a sewer. 2. Telegr. An inverted insulator.

Invert-, abbr. Invertebrata; invertebrate.

in-vert'ant, 1 in-vûr'tənt; 2 in-vĕr'tant, a. Her. Reversed, with the tips drooping; inverted: said of the wings of birds.

in-ver'tase, 1 in-vûr'tās; 2 in-vĕr'tās, n. Chem. An enzym capable of splitting sucrose and related sugars; found in certain plants and the intestines of animals; specif., a ferment which inverts cane-sugar into dextrose and levulose.

in-ver"te-bra'cy, n. [Rare.] The state of being invertebrate.

In-ver"te-bra'ta, 1 in-vûr"tə-brā'tə; 2 in-vĕr"tə-brā'ta, n. pl. Zool. A former section of the animal kingdom including all animals without a vertebral column or notochord, embracing various branches or subkingdoms: opposed to Vertebrata. This term has no longer any taxonomic significance, but is still used loosely to denote invertebrate animals collectively. [< IN-² + L. vertebratus; see VERTEBRATE.] —in-ver'te-brate, n. 1. One of the Invertebrata. 2. One who lacks resolution.

in-ver'te-brate, 1 in-vûr'tə-brit; 2 in-vĕr'tə-brat, a. 1. Destitute of a back-bone; not vertebrate; specif., of or pertaining to the Invertebrata. 2. Figuratively, lacking force or firmness of character; irresolute.

An epoch of invertebrate sentimentalism.

H. B. FULLER Chevalier of Pensier-Vani p. 9. [J. C. C.]

in-ver'te-brat'ed, a. in-ver'te-brat"ed, a. in-ver'ted, 1 in-vûrt'ed; 2 in-vĕrt'ĕd, pa. 1. Turned in a contrary direction, or turned upside down; reversed in order or position. 2. Her. Same as INVERTANT. 3. Bot. Having a position the opposite of the usual or normal one; as, an inverted ovule.—inverted arch, an arch having its crown downward: much used in foundations.—in-ver'ted-ly, adv. In a reversed order.

in-ver'tend, 1 in'vûr-tend; 2 in'vĕr-tĕnd, n. Logic. The original proposition from which the resultant proposition is derived by inversion.

in-ver'ter, 1 in-vûrt'er; 2 in-vĕrt'ẽr, n. One who or that which reverses or changes the order of things.

in-vert'i-bil(e²), 1 in-vûrt'i-bil; 2 in-vĕrt'ĭ-bil, a. 1. Capable of being inverted. 2. Chem. Convertible.

in-ver'tile, a. [Rare.] Easily turned inside out.

in-ver'tin, 1 in-vûr'tin; 2 in-vĕr'tĭn, n. Chem. A ferment that by its action causes the inversion of cane-sugar.

in-ver'tiv(e²), 1 in-vûr'tiv; 2 in-vĕr'tiv, a. Able to cause inversion.

in-ver'tor, 1 in-vûr'tor or -ter; 2 in-vĕr'tor, n. 1. That which inverts or changes a course. 2. Elec. A commutator. 3. Anat. A muscle which rotates inward: opposed to everter.

in'vert-sug"ar, 1 in'vûrt-shug"ər; 2 in'vĕrt-shuġ'ar, n. Chem. An amorphous compound ($C_6H_{12}O_6 + C_6H_{12}O_6$) consisting of equal parts of dextrose and levulose, occurring in nature as a normal constituent of honey and certain fruits, and produced by the action of ferments or by heating cane-sugar with dilute acids.

in'ver-tu'rie, 1 in'vər-tū'ri; 2 in'vĕr-tū'rĭ, n. A royal and municipal burgh in Aberdeenshire, Scotland. In"ver-u'ry.

in'vo-ca'tion, l in'vo-kē'shən; 2 in'vo-cā'shŏn, n. 1. The act of invoking; a calling upon or for in supplication; as, the invocation of a saint; the invocation of aid. 2. Act of summoning or conjuring a devil or evil spirit; also, the incantation or form of sorcery thus used. 3. Old Eng. Law. A calling into court, or order; as, the invocation of papers or evidence into court. 4. The words in which some person or thing is invoked; specif. (Liturg.), one of several forms of prayer in which the blessing of God is sought; as, a service, especially at the beginning of it. [< L. invocatio(n-), < invoco; see INVOKE.] [tion.

in-voc'a-tive(s, a. Of the nature of or serving as an invocation.—in-voc'a-to-ry, l in-vok'ə-tō-ri; 2 in-vŏc'a-to-ry, a. Having the nature of, expressive of, or employed (a word, phrase, etc.) in invocation; as, an invocatory prayer.

in'vo-ca'vit, l in'vo-kē'vit; 2 in'vo-cā'vit, n. Eccl. The first mandate in a case called on account of the opening words of the introit for that day. [L., he has invoked.]

in'voice, l in'veis; 2 in'vŏic, n. [-VOICED; -VOIC-ING.] To make an invoice of, or enter in an invoice; rate.

in'voice, n. l. A list sent to a purchaser, factor, consignee, etc., containing the items, together with the prices and charges, of merchandise sent or to be sent to him. 2. The goods so listed.

His [Timothy Dexter's] most famous business enterprise was that of sending an invoice of warming-pans to the West Indies.
HOLMES Over the Teacups ch. 10, p. 231. [n. m. & co. 1891.]

in'voice-book', n.—i. price, the prime cost of the goods invoiced.

in-voke', l in-vōk'; 2 in-vŏk', vt. [IN-VOKED'; IN-VOK'ING.] 1. To call on for assistance or protection; address in prayer or supplication; as, to invoke the God of battles.

I would invoke those who fill the seats of justice . . . that they execute the wholesome . . . severity of the law.
WEBSTER Works, First Settlement of N. E. ii. vol. i, p. 65. [l. a. & co. 1853.]

2. To call for with earnestness or in supplication; to invoke a blessing. 3. To summon or conjure as a sorcerer or by means of sorcery. 4. To appeal to for confirmation; quote as an authority. 5. Law. To call for by judicial process; as, to invoke papers into court. [< F. invoquer, < L. invoco, < in, on, + voco, call.]—in'vo-ca'te†. Syn.: see ACCOST; APPEAL; PRAY.—in-vok'er, n.

in-vo'lu-cel, l in-vō'lu-sel; 2 in-vŏl'yu-sel (XIII), n. Bot. (1) An involucre subtending the ultimate branching of a compound involucrate flower-cluster; a secondary involucre. (2) A rosette of bracts beneath a calyx. (DIM. < L. involucrum, wrapper; see INVOLUCRE.] in-vo'lu-cel'lum†.

Involucel and Involucre.

in-vo'lu-cel'late l in-vo'lu-sel'it; 2 in-vŏl'yu-sel'at (XIII), a. Bot. Provided with involucels. in-vo'lu-cel-lat'ed†.

in'vo-lu'cre, l in'vo-lū'kər; 2 in'vo-lū'cėr (XIII), n. 1. Bot. (1) A ring or rosette of bracts surrounding the base of a flower-cluster. In many instances the subtending involucres resemble calyxes, as in most apiaceous plants; and all composites are involucrate. (2) In certain ferns, the indusium. (3) In liverworts, a sheath of tissue surrounding the fructifying organs. (4) In certain fungi, the peridium. 2. Anat. A membrane that envelops an organ or structure. 3. Pathol. A development of new bone about a sequestrum. 4. Zoöph. An involucrum. [< L. involucrum, wrapper, < involvo; see INVOLVE.] —in'vo-lu'cral, a. Pertaining to or provided with an involucre.—in'vo-lu'crate, a. Provided with an involucre; forming an involucre. in'vo-lu'crat-ed†; in'vo-lu'cred†.—in'vo-lu'cri-form, a. Of a diminutive involucre; an involucel.—in'vo-lu'cri-form, a. Having the form of an involucre.

in'vo-lu'crum, l in'vo-lū'krəm; 2 in'vo-lū'crŭm, n. [-CRA, pl.] 1. Bot. An involucre. 2. Zoöph. The sheath at the base of a thread-cell or nematocyst. [L.; see INVOLUCRE.]

in-vol'un-ta-ry, l in-vol'ən-tə-ri; 2 in-vŏl'un-ta-ry, a. 1. Lacking will or the power to choose. 2. Contrary to one's will or wishes; resulting from coercion or external necessity; unwilling; as, involuntary obedience.

All human life is sacrifice, or unwilling service.
ROBERTSON Sermons first series, ser. vi, p. 87. [n. 1872.]

3. Not under the control of the will or volition; taking place independently of one's will or volition; not willed; as, the involuntary muscles; an involuntary shudder. 4. Physiol. Of or pertaining to actions or movements of the body which are not subject to the will. 5. Psychol. Designating any reaction which does not involve specific attention and effort. 6. (1) an automatic or reflex action even when accompanied by more or less of consciousness; (2) an imitative or sympathetic reaction, as when one is following the movements of a boxer or fencer; (3) a forced reaction, or one brought about in opposition to desire or will. [< LL. involuntarius, < L. in-, not; and see VOLUNTARY.]—in'vol'un-ta-ri-ly, adv. In an involuntary manner.—in'vol'un-ta-ri-ness, n.

in-vol'un-to-mo'to-ry, l in-vol'ən-tō-mō'tə-ri; 2 in-vŏl'un-to-mō'to-ry, a. Subject to involuntary motor influence, as the visceral wall or splanchnopleure of an embryo.

in'vo-lu'ta, l in'vo-lū'tə; 2 in'vo-lū'ta, n. pl. Conch. A family or group of gastropods with an involute shell, including Cypraidæ. [< L. involutus; see INVOLUTE, a.]

in'vo-lute, l in'vo-lūt; 2 in'vo-lūt, vt. [-LUT'ED; -LUT'ING.] To resume a normal condition of state.

in'vo-lute, a. 1. Complicated by reason of the intertwinings or the intercrelation of parts or elements.

The possible moves [in chess] being not only manifold, but involute, the chances of such errors are multiplied.
R. PROCTOR Works, Murders in the Bue Morgue in vol. i, p. 179. [MD. 1856.]

2. Having the edges rolled inward; in botany, said of certain leaves in vernation, or sepals and petals in estivation. 3. Zoöl. (1) Having the whorls nearly or quite concealing the axis, as a shell. (2) Coiled irregularly, as certain antennæ. 4. Having its working-face an involute curve: said of a gear-tooth. 5. Of or pertaining to the Involuta. [< L. involutus, pp. of involvo; see INVOLVE.]

in'vo-lute, n. l. Geom. A curve (as APB) generated by a point (as P) on a straight line (as CP) that rolls upon another curve (as the circle AB) without sliding: an evolvent. Compare EVOLUTE.

Involute of a Circle.

If a flexible and inextensible string be fixed at one point of a plane curve, and wrapped round the curve, and be then unwound in the plane of the curve, every point of it will describe an involute of the curve. THOMSON AND TAIT Nat. Philos. p. 5. [c. p. 1879.]

His Parables are involutes that unfold as spontaneously as the leaves in spring-time. ALDEN Parables of Our Lord p. 321. [n. 1890.]

2. [Rare.] That which is involved.

in'vo-lut'ed, l in'vo-lūt'ed; 2 in'vo-lūt'ed, pa. 1. Same as INVOLUTE, a. 2. Med. Having suffered involution. See INVOLUTION, 3.—in'vo-lut'ed-ly, adv.

in'vo-lu'tion, l in'vo-lū'shən; 2 in'vo-lū'shŏn, n. 1. The act of involving, infolding, or rolling up, or the state of being involved or rolled up; complication; entanglement. 2. Something involved, rolled up, or entangled.

The two voices rose and fell, minuted and parted, threaded all the involutions of harmony and all the mazes of passion.
ARABELLA B. BUCKLEY Barbara's Heritage p. 39. [D. APP. CO. 1884.]

3. Med. The return of an organ to its normal condition after a physiological increase in its size and structure; as, the involution of the womb after childbirth. 4. Pathol. The deterioration in the tissues due to approaching old age. 5. Math. (1) Arith. & Alg. The multiplication of a quantity by itself any number of times; the raising of a quantity to any power. (2) Geom. A system of pairs of points on a line, so situated that the product of the distances of two points of a pair from a certain fixed point, called the center of involution, is equal to the square of the distances of two other fixed points, real or imaginary, called double points, from this center. These points are said to be in involution. Copunctal lines and curves, or curves and surfaces cut by a transversal through points that are in involution are also said to be in involution.

An involution of points on a conic will have the property that the lines which join conjugate points of the involution to any point on the conic are conjugate lines of an involution in a pencil.
Encyc. Brit. 11th ed., vol. xi. p. 702.

6. Rhet. Involved construction; complicated or cumbrous arrangement of words, clauses, and phrases, produced by the insertion of parenthetical clauses, qualifying or modifying statements, etc., between words that belong together: opposed to simplicity. 7. Logic. The constant repetition of the same premise in an argument. 8. Biol. Same as DEGENERATION, 3. 9. Passage from diffusion to concentration; a stirring or rolling together of parts. Compare AGITATION under EVOLVE, 2. 10. Something that infolds or envelops. [< LL. involutio(n-), < involvere, involve: see INVOLUTE.]—hyperbolic involution (Math.), reconstructed involution with real double points or lines.—l. axis (Geom.), the line around which the coupled tangents of two conic pencils are symmetrical.—l. center (Geom.), the conpunctal point of an assemblage of lines or curves in involution.—l. forms, in bacteria, certain swollen bladder-like or irregular forms which the organisms sometimes assume after their death, or as the result of deleterious influences, such as insufficient nutrition.—l. of evolute (Geom.), the curve of which the evolute is a given curve.—l. of the nerve-fibers, the process of swelling together of parts. See EVOLVE, 2.—l. of the spermatozoon, the process of metamorphosis which the spermatozoon undergoes after its entrance into the ovum. See EVOLVE, 2.—l. of the uterus, the process of gradual diminution in the size of the uterus after parturition. See EVOLVE, 2.—l. of the vocal cords, the process of gradual diminution in the size of the vocal cords after parturition. See EVOLVE, 2.—l. sphere, n. Same as RESTING-SPHERE.—parabolic l. (Math.), involution wherein double elements coincide.—point l. (Geom.), an involution whose elements are points.—in-vol'u-to-ry, a.

in'vo-lu"tive, a. In vo-lū'tive, a. Of the nature of geometrical involution.

in"vo-lu'to-ri-al, a. In vo-lū'to-rĭ-al; 2 In 'vo-lū-tō'rĭ-al.

in-volve', v. In vo-lv'; 2 In -vŏlv', n. [IN-, prefix, + VOLVE, v.] in-volved',] In vo-lv'd; 2 In -vŏlv'd. [IN-, prefix, + VOLVED, p.] in-volv'ent, a. In vo-lv'ent; 2 In -vŏlv'ent. [IN-, prefix, + VOLVENT, a.] in-volv'er,] In vo-lv'ẽr; 2 In -vŏlv'ẽr, n. [IN-, prefix, + VOLVER, n.]

in-volv'ing,] In vo-lv'ing; 2 In -vŏlv'ing, n. [IN-, prefix, + VOLVING, n.] in-vo'ter, n. [IN-, prefix, + VOTER.] One who votes for another; a proxy.

in-vul'gar, a. In vŭl'gẽr; 2 In -vŭl'gẽr. [IN-, prefix, + VULGAR, a.] Not vulgar; not common.

in-vul'ner-a-ble,] In vŭl'nẽr-a-bl; 2 In -vŭl'nẽr-a-bl, a. [IN-, prefix, + VULNERABLE, a.] in-vul'ner-a-ble,] 1. That can not be wounded or hurt; not vulnerable. 2. Not to be damaged or overthrown by attack; having no weak point; unconquerable; as, an invulnerable argument.—in-vul"ner-a-bil'i-ty, n.

in-vul"ner-a-bl(e-ness, n. Same as INVULNERABILITY, abs.

in-vul'ner-ate, a. Having no wounds or injury.

in-vul'tu-a'tion,] In -vul'chu-[or -tiu-]ē'shən; 2 In -vŭl'-chu-[or -tŭ-]ā'shon, n. The act or practise of thrusting a sharp instrument, as a pin or thorn, through a waxen (rarely, clay) image of an enemy, or melting the same before a fire, under the belief that the person would suffer injury or languish and die: a form of witchcraft prevalent in various times, countries, and ages that it was forbidden by law. It still survives in parts of Europe. Among the Anglo-Saxons it was known as stæcnung, "staking." The death (1077) of Sir George Mackwell of Pollock, Scotland, was attributed to this practise, and five persons were executed therefor. [< L. in, into, + vultus, face, image.] in'vul-ta-tion.

in-wall',] In -wŏl'; 2 In -wąl', v. To wall in; fortify with a wall.

in'wall",] In 'wŏl'; 2 In 'wąl', n. An inner wall or lining wall, particularly of a blast-furnace.

in'war"der-ing, n. [Rare.] A wandering in; as (Biol.), an inwandering of cells.

in'ward,] In 'wẽrd; 2 In 'wąrd, a. 1. Situated or being within; internal; interior; inner; as, the inward parts of the body: opposed to outward. 2. Pertaining to the mental or spiritual part of being; as, an inward light. 3. Proceeding as if from far within; muffled; low: said of the voice. 4†. Intimate; familiar; private. [< AS. inweard, < in, in.]

in'ward, n. 1. That which is within; the inside; specif., in the plural, the viscera.

Wherefore breaks that sigh From th' inward of thee?
SHAKESPEARE, Cymbeline act iii. sc. 4.

And he did wash the inwards and the legs, and burnt them upon the burnt offering on the altar. Lev. ix. 14.

2. pl. [Eng.] Import duties. 3†. Mental qualities or conceptions. 4†. An intimate.

in'wards,] 1. Toward the inside, center, or interior, with reference to motion, direction, position, or situation; as, bend it inward; circles lying inward. 2. Into the spirit or mind or its experience.

In all studies lights may be thrown inwards from without.
GLADSTONE Impregnable Rock p. 5. [r. a. c. 1890.]

[< AS. inweard, < in, in.]

in'ward-ly,] In 'wẽrd-li; 2 In 'wąrd-ly, adv. 1. In an inward manner; especially, in one's thoughts and feelings; with no outward manifestation; secretly; as, to grieve inwardly.

"Twas done with Indian skill,' said the scout, laughing inwardly.
CORNELL Last of the Mohicans p. 43. [N. s. E. 1870.]

2. Toward the center or interior; inward; as, to turn inwardly. 3. Essentially; inherently; intrinsically. 4†. Intimately; thoroughly.

in'ward-ness,] In 'wẽrd-nĕs, n. 1. The inner quality or meaning; true nature or import; as, the true inwardness of a scheme.

Nor Nature fails my walks to bless
With all her golden inwardness.
LOWELL Familiar Epistle to a Friend st. 5.

2. The state of being inward or internal, mentally or physically, actually or figuratively. 3. Collectively, the ideas and interests which belong to the life of the mind or spirit, and to its true development.

The German claims, as the native characteristic of their race, a certain inwardness, or spirituality in the large sense of the term.
G. P. FISHER Reformation p. 35. [s. 1884.]

in-wea'ry,] In -wē'rĭ; 2 In -wē'ry, v. To weary in.

in-weav'e,] gether; intertwine by weaving. 2. To weave in; introduce into a fabric or structure as a component part; as, to inweave a pattern in a web of silk.

in-wheel', a. [Rare.] To encircle. in-wheel'ing.

in'wick",] In 'wĭk"; 2 In 'wĭk", n. In curling, a stroke in which the stone rebounds from the inside edge of another stone and then glides close to the tee. Compare OUTWICK.—l. wick'y, a.

in'wick"ing,] In 'wĭk"ing; 2 In 'wĭk"ing, n. Curling. The act of striking on the inside, with a stone, another stone placed with its inner edge touching the foot-line from the tee and its fore edge on a line drawn from the tee at an angle of forty-five degrees with the central line; also, the act of moving this stone partly or wholly out of the tee: one of the nine points of the point-medal game.

in'wind"ing, n. Same as INWREATHING.

in'wit†, n. Conscience, consciousness, or understanding in general. in'witte†; in'wyt†.

in'wit"ness,] In 'wĭt"nĕs; 2 In -wŏrk', v. I. t. To work in or into, as a thread or pattern in embroidery.

II. i. To work or produce effects of any kind within, especially in the mind or soul.

With such treasure to inworking thoughtful pleasure.
R. M. MILNES Dream in a Garden st. 3.

in-wrap',] In -rap'; 2 In -rąp', vt. 1. To surround or cover by or as by wrapping; infold; as, a mountain-peak inwrapped in snow. 2. To involve, especially in a difficulty or perplexity; perplex.

in-wrap'ment,] In -rap'ment or -mənt; 2 In -rąp'ment, n. 1. The act of inwrapping, or the state of being inwrapped. 2. That which wraps; a covering.

in-wrapped',] In -rapt'; 2 In -rąpt', pa. Annodated. S. S.

in-wreathe', vt. Same as INWREATHE.

in-wrought',] In -rŏt'; 2 In -rŏt', pa. Worked into, as a fabric or metal-work, so as to form a part of it; also, having figures or patterns worked in. Syn.: see INHERENT.

in-ya'la,] In -yā'lə; 2 In -yą'la, n. An antelope (Tragelaphus angasi) of South Africa. [M.] [Native name.]

I'o,] In ī'ō; 2 In ī'o, n. [L.] 1. Class. Myth. A maiden changed by Juno into a heifer and tormented by a gadfly because of Jupiter's attentions to her. 2. [cap.] One of the moons of Jupiter. 3. [i-] (1) A large North-American bombycid moth (Hyperchiria io), yellow, with an ocellated spot on each hind wing. The larva is green and covered with stinging hairs. (2) The peacock-butterfly. 4. [i-] A buzzard (Buteo or Onychotes solitarius) of the Hawaiian Islands.

I'o, interj. An exclamation expressive of gladness or exultation: from the Latin. [L.; cp. OH.]

I. O., abbr. India Office.

Io., abbr. Iowa.

I'o-an,] In ī'ō-ą̄n, n. [Hawaii.] The frigate-bird.

Iob,] Iyób; 2 yŏb, n. Bib. (R. V.) Gen. xivi, 13.

I'od-,] I of-od-, of-o-de-; 2 I'od-, I'o-de-. From IODIN: I'o-do-,] combining forms, indicating the presence of iodin in the chemical compound named. The nouns in the following list are self-explaining:

iodacetanilid	iodochlorid	iodoglycerin	iodosulfate
iodantipebrin	iodocuprol	iodohematin	iodosulfid
iodantipyrin	iodogallicin	iodohumin

Other words beginning with these prefixes will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.

I'o-dal,] I of-o-dal; 2 I'o-dal, n. An oily liquid compound (CCl_3CHO) with properties similar to those of chloral and bromal obtained by treating iodin with alcohol and nitric acid.

I'od"am'id, I'od-am'ide, n. Chem. A compound produced by the action of iodin on an amid, resulting in the substitution of iodin for one or more atoms of hydrogen in the NH_2 group.—I'o-dar'gy-rite, n. Mineral. Iodyrite.—I'o-date, n. st. [Rare.] Chem. To iodize. II. n. Chem. A salt of anhydrous iodic acid (IO_3).—I'o-dat"ed, a.—I'o-da'tion, n.—I'o-dat'e, n. [F.] Chem. Iodin; iodid.

I'od-hy'drate, n. Chem. A hydriodate.—I'od-hy'dric, a.—I'od-hy'drin, n. Chem. A compound of glycerin, similar to chlorhydrin, in which the group anhydrous iodic acid is assumed with the elimination of water.

I-od'ic,] ai-od'ik; 2 I-od'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or containing iodin.—iodic acid, a white crystalline compound (HIO_3): an energetic oxidizing agent.

I'o-did",] I of-o-did', -did or -dəid; 2 I'o-did, -dīd or -dəid, n. Chem. A binary compound of iodin; a salt or compound in which iodin is the acid radical; as, potassium iodid.

When sea-weeds are burned, iodides are found in their ashes.
J. H. APPLETON Beginner's Handbook of Chemistry p. 98. [CHAUTAUQUA, 1888.]

—alkaline iodid, a preparation resulting from the action of iodin on any alkali-metal.—green I. of mercury, mercurous iodid.—lead I., a bright-yellow metallic solid which by precipitation is used as a test for the presence of lead or iodin.—mercuric I., a scarlet crystalline compound (HgI_2). It forms as a yellow precipitate when potassium iodid is added to a solution of corrosive sublimate.—mercurous I., a compound (Hg_2I_2) formed by triturating mercury with iodin. In an impure condition it occurs as a green powder.—methyl I., an iodid produced by the action of methyl alcohol upon iodin and phosphorus. It is a colorless, transparent liquid (CH_3I) and is used as a reagent in organic chemistry, a stain for tissues, and a local medicinal application.—nitrogen I., a readily explosive substance (NI_3NH_3), reddish in color.—palladous I., a compound formed upon the addition of a soluble iodid to a salt of palladium in solution: used as a test for iodids.—phosphonium I., a combination of phosphoretted hydrogen and hydriodic acid.—potassium I., a crystalline compound (KI), used in therapeutics and photography.—silver I., a sensitive salt of silver, used in photographic emulsions to produce rapid plates.

I'o-did-ate,] of-o-did-āt; 2 I'o-did-āt, vt. Chem. To treat with an iodid.—I'o-did-a'tion, n.

I'o-did"i'on,] of-o-did-ai'on; 2 I'o-did-ī'on, n. Chem. Iodin when used as a monovalent anion.

I'o-did"ous,] I of-o-did'əs; 2 I'o-did'er-əs, a. Yielding iodin. [< IODIN + L. ferō, bear.]

I'o-dim'e-try,] of-o-dim'i-tri; 2 I'o-dim'e-try, n. Iodometry.

I'o-din,] I of-o-din, -dīn; 2 I'o-din, -dīn, n. Chem. A blue substance obtained from iodin.

I'o-dine,] -dīn, or -dīn (XIII), n. Chem. A bluish-black crystalline haloid element having a metallic luster and yielding, when heated, fumes of a rich violet. It is valuable for its power to combine with other bodies, and is applied externally in medical practise as a counter-irritant. It is also extensively used in photography. In chemical characteristics iodin resembles bromin and chlorin; but either of these two elements will displace iodin from its iodid combinations. It is slightly soluble in water, but readily soluble in alcohol or a potassium iodid solution. The combination of iodin with a base is often unstable and nonvolatile is accompanied by an evolution of light and heat. See ELEMENT. The antidote for iodin poisoning is starch and morphin.

R. J. Desmond was the first to make silver plates, coated with iodide by means of iodine vapors, to the light in a camera; no image was visible until the plate was exposed to vapors of mercury, when that metal was precipitated upon the parts most affected by the light.
Johnson's Univ. Cyc. vol. iii. p. 1,234. [s. a. d. 1877.]

—Churchill's iodin caustic, a preparation consisting of 240 grains of potassium iodid, 120 of iodin, and 1 fluid ounce of water.—l. absorption, the quality of absorbing iodin possessed by fats. Quantitatively it is used as a means of identifying oils.—l. chlorid (Chem.), either of the two compounds, iodin monochlorid (ICl) and iodin trichlorid (ICl_3), produced by the direct combination of chlorin and iodin.—l. number, the iodin value.—l. pentoxid, a preparation consisting of five parts of oxygen and two of iodin.—l. test, a chemical reaction allowing the presence of iodin to be detected or incompletely converted starch in wort or beer, by the formation of blue iodid of starch when a solution of iodin and potassium iodid is added.—l. trichlorid, see iodin chlorid.—l. value, a measure in terms of iodin of the proportion of unsaturated compounds present in oils and fats.—l. water, a saturated aqueous solution of iodin.—tincture of iodin, Chem. Impregnated with or substituted for iodin.—I'o-din-ize, vt. To iodize.

I'o-din-oph'i-lous, a. Readily discolored with iodin.—I'odinophilous vacuole, a minute cell in the sporoplasm of sporozoans containing a substance which stains with iodin.—I'od-I'od, n. Chem. An iodoliodid.—I'o-dī'pin, n. Med. an antisyphilitic and alterative remedy composed of sesame oil and iodin.

I'o-dism,] I of-o-dizm; 2 I'o-dizm, n. Pathol. A morbid condition due to the excessive use of iodin or its compounds.

I'o-dite,] I of-o-dait; 2 I'o-dīt, n. 1. Chem. A salt of iodous acid. 2. Mineral. Same as IODYRITE.

I'o-dize,] I of-o-daiz; 2 I'o-dīz, [=o-dīz-ING.] 1. Med. To treat with or bring under the influence of iodin. 2. Phot. To add iodin to: as, to iodize collodion; also, to expose to the vapor of iodin.—I'o-di'zer, n.

I'o-do-ben'zene, n. Chem. 1. A clear fluid (C_6H_5I), obtained by heating together benzene, iodin, and iodic acid. 2. Iodoxybenzene.—I'o-do-bro'mite, n. Mineral. A pale silver chloro-bromo-iodid ($AgClBrI$) crystallizing in the isometric system.—I'o-do-chlo'rid, n. See IOD-.—I'o-do-cre'sol, n. Chem. Any one of several iodin substitution products of the compound $C_6H_3(CH_3)(OH)$ constituting the iodophous powder employed as an iodoform substitute.—I'o-docrol, n. Chem. Carvacrol iodid.—I'o-do-der'ma, n. Pathol. A diseased condition of the skin caused by iodin.—I'o-do-eth'ane, n. Chem. Ethyl iodid.

I-o'do-form,] ai-ō'də-fōrm; 2 I-ō'do-fōrm; 2 I-ō'do-for-mō'fōrm; 2 I-ō'do-fōrm, n. Chem. A light-yellow crystalline compound (CHI_3), formed by the action of iodin on alcohol in an alkaline solution: similar to chloroform and bromoform. [< IODO- + -FORM.]—I'o-do-form-ize, vt. To give iodoform to. I'o-doformization.

I-o'do-for-main, n. Chem. A molecular compound (CHI_3, $C_6H_{12}N_4$), which forms iodoform upon the addition of water.—I'o-do-form'o-gen, n. Chem. The product of addition resulting from impregnation of the system with iodoform.—I'o-do-for'mo-gen, n. Chem. A yellowish, nearly colorless powder obtained by the action of iodoform on a soluble pretetd.

I'o-do-gal'li-cin, I'o-do-glyc'er-in, etc. See IOD-.

I'o-do-hy'drate, n. Chem. A compound of iodin and some of iodids which mercury forms with metals that are more electropositive: as, iodohydrargyrate of potassium, (K_2I_2).—I'o-do-hy'drate, n. Chem. A hydriodate.—I'o-do-hy'dric, a. Chem. Same as HYDRIODIC.—I'o-do-I'od, n. Chem. An iodin compound, the basic radical of which contains iodin.

I'o-dol,] ai'o-dōl or -dəl: 2 I'o-dōl or -dəl, n. Chem. A yellowish-brown crystalline compound (C_9I_4NH) used in medicine for skin-diseases and as an antiseptic dressing.

I'o-do-mer'cu-rate, n. Chem. A iodohydrargyrate.—I'o-dom'e-thane, n. Chem. Any compound formed when iodin is substituted in methane: specif., methyl iodid.—I'o-dom'e-try, n. Chem. The process of determining iodin volumetrically, or of other compounds involving at some stage the liberation of iodin.—I'o-do-mor'phi, I'o-do-mor'phi-um, n. = I'o-do'ni-um, n. Chem. The hypothetical univalent basic radical H.I, analogous to the radical ammonium (NH_4).—I-o'do-phen, n. Nosophen.—I-o'do-phe'nin, n. Med. An antiseptic and antirheumatic remedy, used externally: an addition of phenacetin, iodin, and hydriodic acid.

I-o'do-phile, a. Chem. Possessing or capable of quickly absorbing iodin.—I'o-do-phil'i-ty, n. Pathol. The condition in which many leucocytes stain brown with dilute solutions of iodin: seen in suppurative disorders.—I'o-doph'thi-sis, n. Pathol. A wasting away caused by the use of iodin.—I'o-do-po-tas'sic, a. Chem. Dependent on the employment of potassium and iodin.—I'o-do-py'rin, n. Med. An antipyretic and antiarthritic remedy formed from iodin chlorid and antipyrin. I'o-da-n"ti-py'rin.—I'o-do-qui'nin, I'o-do-quin'ine, n. Chem. A brown crystalline compound ($C_{20}H_{11}N_2O_2I_2$). Its sulfate is herapathite.—I'o-do'so, n. Chem. The univalent radical, IO.—I'o-do'so-ben'zene, n. Chem. A brown crystalline explosive compound (C_6H_4IO), of basic character.—I'o-do-sper'min, n. Phys. Chem. The substance obtained as a result of treating seminal fluid with a preparation of iodin.—I'o-do-spon'gin, n. Chem. A proteid compound containing iodin, occurring in certain marine sponges.—I'o-do-sul'fate, I'o-do-sul'fid, etc. See IOD.—I'o-do-ther'a-py, n. Med. Treatment of disease by means of iodin or its preparations.—I'o-do-thy'rin, n. Med. An amorphous brown powder derived from the thyroid gland, usually of sheep, and used for disease in which there is deficiency of the thyroid, or perversion of its function, such as goiter, rickets, obesity, cretinism, and myxedema.—I'o-dous, a. L. Of, pertaining to, or like iodin. Specif., in chemistry, containing iodin in lower valency: as, iodous acid, a hypothetical compound (HIO_2).—I'o-dox'y, n. Chem. The monovalent radical IO.—I'o-nox'y-ben'zene, n. Chem. An explosive compound ($C_6H_4IO_2$), resulting from the careful oxidation of iodosobenzene.—I'o-do-zone, n. Chem. A hypothetical compound of iodin and ozone.—I-o'dyrite, n. Pharm. Iodized wool.

I-od'u-ret, } n. Iodid.
I-od'u-ret'ted, } a. Mixed, or medically treated, with iodin.—I-od'u-ra'ted.

I-od'y-rite, n. Mineral. A resinous, yellow, translucent, sectile silver iodid (AgI), crystallizing in the hexagonal system.

I. O. F., abbr. Independent Order of Foresters.

I. O. G. T., abbr. Independent Order of Good Templars.

I-o'la, 1 sī-ō'lă; 2 ī-ō'lă, n. Geog. A township, county-seat of Allen county, Kan.

I'o-las, 1 sī'ō-lăs; 2 ī'ō-lăs, n. Gr. Myth. Son of Iphicles and Automedusa, the charioteer and companion of Hercules, who helped to slay the Hydra. I-o'la-os† [Gr.].

I-o'li-us, 1 sī-ō'lĭ-ŭs; 2 ī-ō'lĭ-ŭs, n. Æolus, a king of Thessaly; home of Jason and Pelias, and the place from which the Argonauts embarked in the quest of the golden fleece.

I'o-lus, 1 sī'ō-lŭs; 2 ī'ō-lŭs, n. Gr. Myth. A daughter of Eurytus, king of Œchalia: beloved by Hercules.

I'o-lite, 1 sī'ō-lait; 2 ī'ōlit, n. A vitreous, blue, pleochroic, transparent silicate ($H_2(Mg,Fe)_4Al_3Si_5O_{18}$), crystallizing in the orthorhombic system: used as a gem. [< Gr. ion, violet, + -LITE.]

I. O. M., abbr. Isle of Man.

I'on†, 1 aī'on; 2 ī'ŏn, n. Chem. & Phys. Chem. 1. A substance, or one of the component atoms or radicals, resulting from electrolytic decomposition or dissociation; a compound of an atom or group of atoms and an electron or electrons, as the compound $H^+ + Cl^-$ (or HCl), which is produced by substituting a positive particle for the chlorin in a molecule of hydrochloric acid (HCl). The atom, or radical, arising from dissociated electrolytes, which moves in the direction of the anode or positive pole, is called the electropositive ion, while that moving in the opposite direction is called the electronegative ion. When an electrolyte becomes dissociated in water each of the ions formed carries a unit electric charge or a multiple of it. The electropositive ion of hydrogen carries 3.4×10^{-10} electrostatic units; that is, it is combined with one quantity of electricity. Upon dissociation, a molecule of hydrochloric acid breaks up into a positive hydrogen ion (H^+) and a negative chlorin ion (Cl^-). The potassium ferrocyanid molecule ($K_4Fe(CN)_6$) forms the complex ion $Fe(CN)^{----}_6$, and the potassium ions K^+, K^+, K^+, K^+. Most of the properties of a dilute solution of an electrolyte are equal to the sum of the properties of the ions contained in it. COMP.: ANION; CATION; DISSOCIATION; ELECTROLYSIS; ELECTRON; MIGRATION OF IONS.

With free electrons in a mass of gas, for example air, each electron attaches to itself a certain number of molecules of the gas and so forms a gas ion: if the velocity of the electron is very great, it may produce a relatively large number of positive and negative gas ions. [< Gr. ïōn, ppr. of ienai, go.]

I'on‡, n. 1. A Greek poet who lived about 450 B. C. 2. Gr. Myth. The ancestor of the Ionians, the son of Apollo and Creusa. The hero of Euripides's tragedy Ion. He was sent to Delphi, and, after a lapse of years, Xuthus and Creusa went there to consult the oracle as to obtaining an heir, and were told that the first person whom Xuthus should meet on leaving the shrine would be his son. That person was Ion, and Creusa, believing him to be a son of Xuthus by a former marriage, treated the youth. I'on‡ [Gr.]. 3. The hero of Talfourd's tragedy Ion.

-ion, suffix. Used in physical chemistry to denote a radical in the ionic or electrolytic sense: as, oxion, an abbreviation of the name of the radical. [< L. -ōn(-).]

Ion., abbr. Ionic.

I-o'na, 1 aī-ō'nă; 2 ī-ō'nă, n. An island, parish, and village of the Inner Hebrides, Argyllshire; $1^1/_2$ by $3^1/_2$ m.; site of the monastery built by St. Columba, 583.

I-o'nel, 1 aī-ō'nĕl; 2 ī-ō'nĕl, n. In Bulwer's Last Days of Pompeii, a beautiful maiden who marries Glaucus and is converted to Christianity.

I-o'nes†, n. Geol. A formation comprised in the Miocene series of strata as developed in the foot-hills of the Sierra Nevada.

I-o'ni-a, 1 aī-ō'nĭ-ă; 2 ī-ō'nĭ-a, n. 1. The ancient name of the coast district and islands of W. Asia Minor, peopled by Greek colonists. 2. A county in central Michigan; 575 sq. m. 3. Its county-seat.

I-o'ni-an, 1 aī-ō'nĭ-an; 2 ī-ō'nĭ-an, a. Of or pertaining to Ionia or the Ionians; Ionic.

— Lovelier Than all the valleys of Ionian hills. TENNYSON Œnone st. 1.

— Ionian mode, see MODE, — Ionian school, the earliest branch of the Greek school of cosmological philosophy, originating among the Ionian Greeks (6th century B. C.), and including Thales, Anaximander, and Anaximenes, usually called the Earlier Ionians, as distinguished from those of the 5th century, Heraclitus, Empedocles, and Anaxagoras, known as the Later Ionians. The philosophy of nature held by the former was fundamentally hylozoism. They taught that the world originated from a primitive substance which they thought of as including both the material substance and the formative principle which shaped the material. With Thales, this primitive substance was water; with Anaximander, the boundless, conceived of as a sort of indifferentiated "stuff"; with Anaximenes, air. The later Ionians felt the necessity of introducing the conception of a principle working-forming force, which Heraclitus found of as fire, and Anaxagoras as mind, or nous. See GREEK PHILOSOPHY.— I. school of painting, the school of Zeuxis of Heraclea, in lower Italy, and Parrhasius of Ephesus, during and just after the Peloponnesian war; celebrated for its realism and its technic.

I-o'ni-an, 1 aī-ō'nĭ-an; 2 ī-ō'nĭ-an, n. A member of one of the divisions of the ancient Greek race originally inhabiting Attica and vicinity and spread thence over the islands of the Ægean and Tyrrhenian seas and part of Asia Minor. Compare DORIAN, EOLIAN, and ACHEAN. The Ionians, pl. [Rare.]

The inhabitants of Attica and Eubœa were also claimed as Ionians, and in any case the Ionians must have been inhabitants of the same region and mingled with the sea; . . . at a later time, owing to the development of Athens and the Ionian colonies in Asia Minor, they became the most adventurous and the most civilized part of the Hellenic nation.

I-o'ni-an Is'lands. A chain of islands off the western coast of Greece: 387 sq. m.; chief town, Corfu.

I-o'ni-an sea. A part of the Mediterranean sea, between Greece and southern Italy.

I-on'ic, 1 aī-on'ĭk; 2 ī-ŏn'ĭc, a. 1. Of or pertaining to Ionia or the Ionians, or to some region or object named from them.

No Greek work, written before 450 B. C., was written in the Ionic dialect, which we have. JAMES GOW Companion to School Classics pt. i, p. 9. [MACM. 1888.]

2. Of, pertaining to, or designating the second order of ancient Greek architecture. See phrase below. 3. Pros. Of, pertaining to, or composed of the Ionic foot. See IONIC FOOT. [< L. Ionicus, < Gr. Iōnikos, < Iōnia, Ionia.]

— Ionic architecture, the second of the Greek orders, coming between the Doric and the Corinthian. Its development was probably influenced by Assyrian productions in metal, in which the volute or scroll figures. Its most distinguishing feature is the capital, which has four spiral projections called volutes, properly the same in front and rear. In Greek architecture these show an approximately flat face on the two opposite sides of the capital: in later Roman examples they project out of the moldings under the angles of the abacus so as to render four faces of the capital uniform, the abacus being worked hollow, as in the Corinthian. The shaft is about nine diameters high, at the best period always fluted; the base in the most perfect examples, as those at Athens, is Attic. The entablature is either plain or enriched. See GREEK and ROMAN ARCHITECTURE, under the respective adjectives.— I. dialect, that dialect of ancient Greek which was spoken in Ionia and Attica, and in most of the Ægean islands. It included (1) Old Ionic or epic, or epic dialect, used in the poetry of Homer and Hesiod; (2) New Ionic, the language of Ionia about 425 B. C., found in Herodotus the historian, and in the medical writings of Hippocrates; (3) the Ionic of Attica or Attic proper from 400 B. C., the language of all which is especially elegant, history, and oratory. See ATTIC; DORIC; EOLIC; EPIC.— I. foot (Pros.), a foot of six times in 3–4 time, either two longs and two shorts (– ⏑ ⏑ –), called greater Ionic, or Ionic a majore, or two shorts and two longs (⏑ ⏑ – –), called lesser Ionic, or Ionic a minore.

I-on'ic, n. Anglo-Ind. Of or pertaining to an ion.

The author has measured the specific ionic velocities of other ions. Nature (London) Dec. 15, 1892, p. 164.

I-on'ic, n. 1. An Ionic foot. 2. A verse composed of Ionic feet. 3. The Ionic dialect. 4. [l.c.] A style of printing-type with large and somewhat heavy roman face.

This line is in Ionic.

I-on'i-cism, 1 aī-on'ĭ-sizm; 2 ī-ŏn'ĭ-cĭsm, n. A characteristic or idiom of the Ionic dialect.

I-on'i-cize, 1 aī-on'ĭ-saiz; 2 ī-ŏn'ĭ-cīze, v. [-CIZED; -CIZ'ING.] To render Ionic; give an Ionic character to.

I'on-ized-ium, 1 aī'o-nīd'ĭ-ŭm; 2 ī'o-nīd'ĭ-ŭm. n. Bot. Same as CALCEOLARIA. [Dim. < Gr. ion, violet.]

I-on'ism, 1 aī'o-nizm; 2 ī'o-nĭsm, n. A peculiarity of the Ionic dialect; Ionic speech or usage.— I'o-nist, n. One who uses Ionic forms or dialect.

I'o-nite, 1 aī'o-nait; 2 ī'o-nīt, n. A mineral resin originally found in Ione valley, California.

I-o'nit-um, 1 aī-ō'nĭt-ŭm; 2 ī-ō'nĭt-ŭm, n. Chem. A supposedly new element resembling thorium and assumed to be a disintegration product of actinium: a name given by Boltwood in 1907.

I'on-iz"a-bil(ĕ)†, 1 aī'on-aiz'a-bil; 2 ī'on-īz'a-bĭl, a. Chem & Phys. Capable of being separated into ions.

I'on-iz"a-bil'i-ty†, n. Capability of being ionized.

I'on-ize, 1 aī'on-aiz; 2 ī'on-īze, vt. [-IZED; -IZ'ING.] Chem. & Phys. To convert, totally or in part, into ions; divide into ions.—I'on-iz'er, n.

I-on'o-gen, 1 aī-on'o-jen; 2 ī-ŏn'o-ĝĕn, n. Phys. Chem. Any compound susceptible of ionic dissociation.

I-on'o-graph, 1 aī-on'o-graf; 2 ī-ŏn'o-ĝrăf, n. A device which records automatically the condition of ionization of the air.

I'o-none, 1 aī'o-nōn; 2 ī'o-nōn, n. Chem. An oil consisting of a mixture of two isomeric aromatic ketones of the formula $C_{13}H_{18}O$. On account of its odor, it is used extensively in the manufacture of violet perfumes. [< Gr. ion, violet.]

I'o-ny, 1 aī'o-ni; 2 ī'o-nĭ, n. A Greek tragic poet; son of Sophocles, who falsely declared his father insane; he lived about 420 B. C.; his works have been lost.

I'o-qua, 1 aī'ō-kwe; 2 ī'o-kwa, n. Same as HIAQUA.

-ior, suffix. Used (1) to form the comparative degree; taken from the Latin comparative ending -ior, as superior, ulterior, senior. (2) As a variation of the earlier spelling -iour: derived from the F. -ieur, OF. -eiur, -eior, from L. -ātor; usually found in words coming from French or Spanish, as warrior, formerly warriour, from the OF. guerreior.

I. O. R., abbr. Independent Order of Rechabites.

I. O. R. M., abbr. Improved Order of Red Men.

I'os, 1 aī'os; 2 ī'ŏs, n. One of the Cyclades, a county in the Ægean sea; Cyclades nome; 52 sq. m.; the modern Nio.

I-os'co, 1 aī-os'kō; 2 ī-ŏs'co, n. A county in E. central Michigan; county-seat, Tawas.

I-os'ka-ha, 1 aī-os'kă-hă; 2 ī-ŏs'ka-hă, n. [Am. Ind.] A mythical being regarded by the Huron Indians as the creator of the universe and the originator of their race. Closely associated with him was Ataentsic, of whom he is variously supposed to have been husband, son, and grandson. Ioskeha was regarded as representing the sun; Ataentsic, the moon. To the latter was ascribed the care of souls and the cutting off of human existence, hence she was malevolent. The former was credited with the control of the welfare of the living and regarded as beneficent. In this myth also figures Tawiscara, brother to Ioskeha, whom the latter is supposed to have murdered.

I. O. S. M., abbr. Independent Order of the Sons of Malta.

I-o'ta, 1 aī-ō'tă; 2 ī-ō'ta, n. 1. Philol. The ninth letter and fourth vowel (I, i) in the Greek alphabet: pronounced as ī in hit (short) or in machine (long). See for its history and relations the English I, i. 2. A small or insignificant matter or part.

Because a man does not understand one iota of his author, is he therefore not to comment upon him? DE QUINCEY Letters to a Young Man letter v, p. 70. [L. & v. 1858.]

— Iota subscript (Gr. Gram.), the Greek ι written below the vowels α, η, and ω, after 100 B. C., when it had ceased to be pronounced as part of a diphthong originally written on the line and sounded, and still so written when the first vowel is a capital: then called iota adscript.— I-o'ta-cism, n. Philol. The application of the modern or traditional pronunciation in Greek of the sound of ι, η, ν, ει, η, οι, υι (which is that of ī as in me) to the same vowels and diphthongs of ancient Greek: opposed to etacism. I-o"ta-ma'tism†. Compare LAMBDACISM; RHOTACISM.— I-o'ta-cist, n. One who favors iotacism.

I-o'tas, 1 aī-ō'tăs; 2 ī-ō'tas, n. Pseudonym of Mrs. Kathleen Mannington Caffyn; a writer of romance.

I'o-ta'ri-um, 1 aī'o-tā'rĭ-ŭm; 2 ī'o-tā'rĭ-ŭm, n. [-RI-A, pl.] [L.] An insect's poison-gland.

I'o-tize, 1 aī'o-taiz; 2 ī'o-tīze, v. [Rare.] Phon. To introduce the sound of ī or y before another letter, e. g., as before the ŭ in fuse.— I'o-ti-za'tion, n.

I O U. 1. A paper having on it these letters (meaning I owe you), followed by a name and duly signed. 2. [Colloq.] A symbol of indebtedness.

I'ou-er-n'a, 1 aī'ŭ-er-nā'; 2 ī'ŭ-ẽr-n'a, n. Same as IERNE.

-iour, suffix. See -IOR.

I'o-wa, 1 aī'o-wa, n. 1. A N. central State of the United States; 56,586 sq. m.: capital, Des Moines. 2. A river in Iowa; length, 300 m. to the Mississippi river. 3. A county in E. Iowa; 576 sq. m.; county-seat, Marengo. 4. A township in S. W. Wisconsin; 763 sq. m.; county-seat, Dodgeville.

Ir'i-des'cence, 1 ĭr'ĭ-dĕs'ens; 2 ĭr'ĭ-dĕs'ĕns, n. The state or quality of being iridescent; a many-colored appearance. Ir'i-des'cen-cy‡.

Lines drawn upon glass with a diamond point if sufficiently near together cause a beautiful iridescence by the interference of light. B. SILLIMAN Elements of Physical Geography ch. 2, p. 44.

Ir'i-des'cent, 1 ĭr'ĭ-dĕs'ent; 2 ĭr'ĭ-dĕs'ĕnt (XIII), a. Exhibiting changing rainbow-colors due to the interference of light when reflected from thin films or fine striations, as those on mother-of-pearl, in the feathers of many birds, and on the surface of a floating layer of oil.

The common pigeon has iridescent feathers on the breast.

Century Dict. and Cyc. of Names p. 402. [v. 1887.]

I-rid'i-c, 1 ĭ-rĭd'ĭ-; 2 ĭ-rid'i-. In chemistry, a combining form of IRIDIUM.

I-rid'i-an, 1 ĭ-rĭd'ĭ-an; 2 ĭ-rid'i-an, a. Of or pertaining to the iris of the eye. i-rid'ic‡.

I-rid'ic, a. Of, pertaining to, or containing iridium in its higher valence; as, iridic acid, H_2IrO_3.— iridic acid, a colorless crystalline compound, $(CH_2O)_2C_6H_7(OH)CH_2CO_2H$, derived from irigenin by treating it with alkali.

I-rid'i-c-o-, 1 ĭ-rĭd'ĭ-ĭk-o-; 2 ĭ-rid'i-c-o-. Combining form of iridic as exemplified in certain double salts in which iridium acts apparently as a tetrad.

I-rid'in, 1 ĭ-rĭd'ĭn; 2 ĭ-rid'in, n. Chem. A preparation obtained from the root of the blue flag (Iris versicolor), and used in medicine as a purgative. [< IRIS, 3 (2).]

I'rid-ine, a. [Rare.] Iridescent.

I-rid'i-o-, 1 ĭ-rĭd'ĭ-ō-; 2 ĭ-rid'i-o-. Combining form of iridium.— I-rid'i-o-plat'i-num, n. An amalgamation of iridium and platinum, harder than unalloyed platinum.

I-rid'i-ous, a. Of, pertaining to, containing iridium in its lower valence; as, iridious chlorid ($IrCl_3$).

I'ri-dite, 1 ī'rĭ-dīt; 2 ī'ri-dit, n. Chem. A salt of iridious acid.

I-rid'i-um, 1 ĭ-rĭd'ĭ-um; 2 ĭ-rid'i-um, n. A silver-white, hard, brittle metallic element belonging to the platinum group, with the members of which it is found alloyed in nature.

In 1804 Tennant proved that the platinum residues contained two new metals, to one of which he gave the name of iridium, on account of the variety of colors it exhibits, and to the other the name osmium, because of the peculiar odor which its volatile oxide possesses. Osmium is found in platinum ores in the form of an alloy with iridium called osmiridium, which is also found in the platinum ores in considerable quantity in the form of the double chlorid iridium and sodium. . . . After osmium, iridium is the most difficultly fusible and least volatile of the platinum metals. . . . Iridium is sometimes used for pointing gold pens. . . . It forms an alloy with platinum which is very hard, while at the same time it is extremely hard. . . . This alloy has been employed in the production of standard meter bars and for making electrodes to be used in corrosive liquids. . . . Iridium and osmium. Chemistry vol. iii, Metals pp. 1320, 1332–34. [MACM. '07.]

I-rid'i-um, 1 ĭ-rĭd'ĭ-um; 2 ĭ-rid'i-um, n. [Gr. iris (irid-), rainbow.]— iridium sesquioxid, a bluish-gray powder, obtained by mixing potassium-iridichlorid with sodium-carbonate and heating to a dull red. In its pure state it requires a fine black color to porcelain after firing. It is Ir_2O_3.

Ir'i-di-za'tion, 1 ĭr'ĭ-dĭ-zā'shan; 2 ĭr'i-di-zä'shon, n. 1. The act of making or the state of being iridescent. 2. Pathol. The blurred or rainbow-like appearance around a light seen by eyes affected with glaucoma.

I'ri-dize, 1 ī'rĭ-dīz; 2 ī'ri-diz, vt. [=DIZED; =DIZ'ING.] 1. To tip with iridium; as, to iridize a gold pen. 2. To render iridescent. Ir'i-dize‡.

Ir'i-do-, 1 ĭr'ĭ-do- or ī'rĭ-do-; 2 ĭr'i-do- or ī'ri-do-. A combining form; from Latin iris (irid-) — the iris of the eye (see IRIS).— Ir'i-do-ce'le, n. Pathol. Prolapse or protrusion of the iris at the corneal wound.— Ir'i-do-cho'roi-di'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the iris and choroid.— Ir'i-do-cer'a-ti'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the iris and cornea. Ir'i-do-ker'a-ti'tis‡.— Ir'i-do-cho'roi-di'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the iris up to the choroid. — Ir'i-do-cy-cli'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the iris and ciliary circle.— Ir'i-do-cyst, n. Zool. A subepidermal cell of connective tissue in certain cuttlefishes which manifest iridescence by diffraction of light.— Ir'i-do-dy'ne-ri'a, n. Refracting substance in the skin of certain fishes.— Ir'i-dod'e-sis, n. Surg. An obsolete operation for an artificial pupil consisting in forming a portion of the iris in a corneal incision and strangulating it with a ligature.— Ir'i-do-di-al'y-sis, n. Surg. An operation by which the iris is separated from its attachment.— Ir'i-do-do-ne'sis, n. Pathol. Unsteadiness or trembling of the iris, generally due to lack of the support of the lens.— Ir'i-do-ki-ne'sis, n. The normal action of muscular fibers in the iris causing dilatation and contraction of the pupil.

I'ri-dol, 1 ī'rĭ-dŏl or -dōl; 2 ī'ri-dŏl or -dōl, n. Chem. A colorless crystalline compound ($CH_2C_6H(OH)(OCH_3)_2$) obtained by dehydrating irigenin. [< IRIS + -OL.]

I-rid'o-lin, 1 ĭ-rĭd'o-lĭn; 2 ĭ-rid'o-lin, n. [Rare.] Same as i-rid'o-line, n. Chem. An oily liquid compound ($C_{10}H_{18}N$) derived from coal-tar. It has basic properties, and is isomeric with lepidin. [< IRIDESCENT + L. oleum; see OIL.]

I'ri-do-ma-la'ci-a, n. Pathol. A softening of the iris.— Ir'i-do-me'ter, n. Physiol. Pertaining to or involved in movement of the iris of the eye.— Ir'i-do-par'e-sis, n. Pathol. Partial paralysis of the iris, causing it to be sluggish in its reaction to light.— Ir'i-do-ple'gi-a, n. Pathol. Paralysis of the iris.—Ir"i-dop-to'sis, n. Pathol. Prolapse of the iris.—Ir"i-do-rhex'is, n. Pathol. Rupture of the iris. Ir"i-dor-rhex'is.—Ir·id'o-scope, n. An instrument for examining the iris.

Ir"i-dos'min(es), n. [ir·i-dez'min, n. Ir·i-dŏs'min, n. Mineral. A varying isomorphous mixture of iridium and osmium, found native in flattened, six-sided, lustrous, malleable grains: used for pointing gold pens. [< IRIDIUM + OSMIUM.] Ir"i-dos'mi-um; os"mi-rid'i-um), n.

Ir·id'o-tome, n. Surg. An instrument for making an incision into the iris.—Ir"i-dot'o-my, n. Surg. Any incision into the iris.

Ir·id-pin'nā Si'nus, [ir·i-dum sal'nis; 2 ir·i-dum sī'nis. Astron. The lunar gulf of rainbows, a semicircular configuration in the northeast quarter of the moon's face.

Ir·rig'e-nin, [ir·ij'i-nin; 2 ir·rig'e-nin, n. Chem. A compound ($C_{15}H_{10}O_6$) resulting from the treatment of luteïn with acids. [< IRIDIN + -GEN.]

Ir·ri'jah, [ir·ai'ja; 2 ir·ri'ja, n. Bib. Jer. xxxvii, 13. [Heb., Jah sees.]

Ir'i-on, [ir'i-on; 2 ir'ī-ŏn, n. A county in W. Texas; 800 sq. m.

Ir'is, [ai'ris; 2 ir'is, n. [I'RIS-ES or IR'I-DES, [I.] -es or ir'i-dīz; 2 -ē-z or ir'i-dīz, pl.] 1. Anat. A thin colored curtain stretched vertically across the aqueous chamber of the eye in front of the crystalline lens, having a central circular aperture called the pupil. See illus. under EYE.

Iris florentina (Orris-root).

2. The rainbow; also, any iridescent appearance like that of the rainbow.

TURNER . . . went to the entrance of his iris.
RUSKIN Modern Painters vol. i, pt. ii, p. 131. [W. s. 1858.]

3. Bot. (1) [I-] A notable genus of plants of the family Iridaceæ, with sword-shaped leaves, and large handsome flowers. They are known in cultivation as iris or fleur-de-lis (flower-de-luce). (2) A plant of the genus Iris. See FLEUR-DE-LIS. (3) The root of an East Indian species of iris used in pharmacy and in the manufacture of perfumes. 4. [I-] Myth. The rainbow personified as the messenger of Juno (Hera) and the goods, and often represented in art as a youthful winged maiden in a short tunic, with a herald's staff in her hand, and sometimes, talaria on her feet. 5. Entom. The inner ring of an ocellated spot. 6. A precious stone. 7. The name of the seventh asteroid. [L., < Gr. iris, lit. rainbow.]

—bulbous iris, any of several dwarf irises, half-hardy bulbous plants, cultivated for their numerous bright-colored flowers. Iris xiphium and I. anglica are well-known examples.—dwarf i., any of several low-growing irises, especially Iris verna, I. pumila, and I. cristata. They spread rapidly by means of their creeping subterranean stems. Blue, yellow, and lilac are the usual colors of the flowers.—Florentine i., orris-root (Iris florentina).—German i., any of several irises which are hybrids of Iris flavescens, I. florentina, I. variegata, I. sambucina, and I. squalens. The group is named after I. germanica, this plant is the parent of but few hybrids or varieties.—i. camphor, the solid constituent of oil of orris, composed mainly of myristicin.—Iris di'aphragm, n. Optics. An adjustable diaphragm, like the iris of the eye, designed for regulating the size of the aperture to admit the light in any lens combination.—i. disease, n. Rainbow ringworm.—i. diaphragm, the aperture-stop which controls the light entering the system.—i. ornament, n. Same as BARTON'S BUTTON. See under BUTTON, n.—i. root, Orris-root.—i. swallow, n. A swallow (subgenus Iridoprocne) with steel-blue upper parts, as the North-American white-bellied swallow (Tachycineta bicolor).—Juno i., any of several hardy, spring-flowering bulbous irises: the xiphiums of the Spanish.

—Ir'is-at'ed, a. Iridescent.—Ir"is-a'tion, n.—Iri'sed, a. 1. Having colors like those of the rainbow. 2. Having an iris or irises: generally compounded with some qualifying word, as large-irised.

Ir"is-am'li, [ai'ris-am'in; 2 ir'is-ăm'in, n. Chem. A red basic dyestuff, colorless until wood direct. Ir"is-am'ine, n.

Ir"is-scope, [ai'ris-skōp; 2 ir'i-scōp, n. A device for exhibiting the prismatic colors, consisting of a plate of black glass smeared with soap and then rubbed dry with chamois leather. Upon this plate the vapor of the breath directed through a tube will cause the prismatic colors to appear in rings. [< Gr. iris, rainbow, + -SCOPE.]

Ir'ish, [ai'rish; 2 ir'ish, a. Of or pertaining to Ireland or the people or language of Ireland.

He had all the Irish virtues — the warm, generous heart, the gay spirits, the quick sympathy, the sweet courtesy which would always rather say a kind than a disagreeable thing.
DINAH M. CRAIK My Mother and I p. 259. [R. 1874.]

—i. Free State. See IRELAND.—i. heath, a low straggling ericaceous shrub (Dabœcia polifolia) of western Europe.—i. mail, see under MAIL.—i. moss, a seaweed (Chondrus crispus) largely used for food; carrageen.—I. point, Irish point-lace.—I. pompano, a fish (Gerres olisthostoma) of Florida and the West Indies: a mojarra.—i. stew, a stew of mutton, potatoes, and onions.—i. turkey [Slang], corned beef and cabbage.—I. work (Needlework), embroidery of linen, or other white fabric, with white thread; specialty of Irish needleworkers.—Irish-worst', n. pl. Bot. Sea-beans. See SEA-BEAN.

Ir'ish, [ai'rish; 2 Irish, n. 1. pl. The natives of Ireland and their immediate descendants elsewhere: chiefly (1) the original Celtic race, (2) descendants of early English colonists long thoroughly identified and intermingled with the Celts; (3) the descendants of Scotch colonists in the north (Scotch-Irish); and (4) English landholders. 2. The Irish Celtic language of Ireland. See CELTIC, n.

The Ogham inscriptions (A. D. 500) preserve the oldest forms of the language. The Roman cursive alphabet of the 5th century was introduced by St. Patrick and adopted. The decline in the use of Irish began in the eighteenth century, and the language was gradually superseded by English until 1901, when 20,953, or .45 per cent. of the population, could speak Irish only, and 620,189, or 13.91 per cent., could speak Irish and English. Thus 641,-142, or 14.36 per cent., could speak Irish. In 1881 the number was 949,932, or 18.20 per cent. In 1893 the Gaelic League, an organization devoted to the preservation and extension of the Gaelic language, was formed, and the census returns of Ireland for 1911 showed that the number of pupils learning Irish in the schools was on the increase.

3. The English dialect of Ireland, marked by characteristic idioms and the pronunciation called "brogue" or "brogue."

4. [pl.] Money; disputatious money: a humorous use of his Irish. 5. [IRISHES, pl.] Products of Ireland, as, Irish lace, linen, whisky, etc. 6†. A kind of backgammon.

Ir'ish-er, [ai'rish-ər; 2 Irish-er, n. [Scot. & Ir.] An Irishman.

Ir'ish-ism, [ai'rish-izm; 2 Irish-ism, n. [Also I-.] A Hibernicism. 2. Irish character or traits collectively.

Ir'ish-ize, [ai'rish-aiz; 2 Irish-īz, vt. [-IZED; -IZ'ING.] Same as HIBERNICIZE.

Ir'ish-ly, [ai'rish-li; 2 Irish-ly, adv. [Rare.] In an Irish manner.

Ir'ish-man, [ai'rish-men; 2 Irish-man, n. [-MEN, pl.] A man of Irish birth or of Irish race.—Wild Irishman. 1. Eng. Pol. Hist. An Irishman who lived in the English pale; by extension [Humorous], any erratic Irishman. 2. [Collog.] A mail-train which runs from Euston station, London, to Holyhead. 3. A petty New Zealand shrub (Discaria toumatou); the tumakakuru.

Ir'ish-ness, [ai'rish-nes; 2 Irish-nĕs, n. Irish character or quality.

Ir'ish-ry, [ai'rish-ri; 2 Irish-ry, n. 1. The Irish collectively, or a company of Irish. 2. Erse, including Highlanders and Irishmen. 3. [Rare.] Irishism.

Ir'ish-y, [ai'rish-i; 2 Irish-y, a. [Rare.] Irish-like (medium iron). See LOFT, n. 4. In the leather trade, a unit of thickness equal to $^1/_{64}$ of an inch. [< AS. īren, īsen, perhaps < ts, ice.] Ir'on†; ir'net.

—alpha'ron, n. Pure iron which has undergone the changes of allotropy, which continue below 760° C.: the most magnetic of all known substances.—ball i., same as CLAY IRONSTONE. See CLAY.—Bessemer i. Wrought iron, containing phosphorus, making very fine smooth castings, and used for ornaments and jewelry.—beta-i., n. Iron having undergone the changes of allotropy, which occur between the temperatures of 760° and 900° C.—black i., malleable iron untinned: distinguished from tinned or white iron.—burnt i. Metal. 1. Iron which has suffered a change of structure and become brittle through overheating. 2. In the Bessemer and open-hearth processes, iron which has been exposed to oxidation until all its carbon is gone and oxid of iron has been formed in the mass.—cast i. (Foundry.), a cage-like core-iron.—chilled i., cast iron which has undergone a rapid cooling process by which it is rendered hard and brittle on the outside while remaining soft in the center.—coke-i., n. Iron produced in a furnace in which coke is used as fuel.—common i., the poorest quality of commercial iron.—corrugated i., sheet iron bridged by passing between fluted rollers.—decarbonized i., ingot-iron, or wrought iron.—first i. (Whaling), that toggle-iron which is thrown first.—fore-part i., a burnisher for finishing the edges of the soles of boots and shoes.—gad i., n. A form in which iron exists above 900° C. It is of cubic crystallization and nearly non-magnetic below 1130° C.—granular i. (Metal.), iron which has undergone a granular fracture.—gray i., a cast iron containing much graphitic carbon.—H i., an iron or steel beam with an H-like cross-section.—hoop-iron, [Trade name], iron which has contains iron as a third element.—i. and I. (Engin.), actual contact of parts, as one piece of iron bolted to another, or absolute bearing without bolting.—i. bible n. See table under BLACK.—i. blue, n. Same as PRUSSIAN BLUE. 2. A species of fly used as a bait in fishing: properly i. blue fly.—i. bound, a. 1. Bound with iron. 2. Fixed or surrounded with rocks: said of a harbor or inland coast. 3. Hard to change or alter; unyielding as iron; as, iron-bound rules.—i. bruciite, n. Mineral. A partially decomposed brucite containing iron. i. by oxygen, iron reduced to a metallic powder by hydrogen gas; pyrophoric iron. See under REDUCE.—i. carbonate, n. Siderite.—i. cased, a. Cased with iron.—i. chamber, n. The charging- or reverberating-chamber of a puddling-furnace.—i. clay, n. Same as CLAY IRONSTONE. See CLAY.—i. cloth, n. Chain mail; also, a fabric made of metal rings for cleaning boilers, tubes, and other vessels.—i. fall, n. The descent of a meteorite.—i. fisted, a. Closefisted; miserly.—i. flint, n. Mineral. Brown or red varieties of ferruginous quartz.—i. founder, n. One who makes iron castings.—i. foundry, n. A place where iron castings are made.—i. foundery†.—i. furnace, n. A furnace in which iron is smelted or worked in any way.—i. glance, n. Mineral. A crystallized variety of hematite.—i. grass, n. Knot- or hassock-grass.—i. gray. I. a. Grayish, like iron newly broken; as, iron-gray hair. II. n. The color of freshly cut iron; hence, a horse of that color.—i. grey†.—i. gymnite, n. Mineral. A red variety of deweylite containing iron.—i. handed, a. Having a very strong hand; hence, vigorous; unyielding; despotic; as, an iron-handed ruler.—i. hard, a. Hard as iron; impenetrable.—i. headed, a. Sheathed or pointed with iron; figuratively, obstinate; pestilent.—i. heart, n. The New Zealand ihrtree (Metrosideros tomentosa).—i. hearted, a. Hard-hearted; unfeeling; cruel.—i. heater.

n. The piece of metal heated in the fire for a laundress's box-iron.—1. shoe, n. The opening in a blast-furnace through which the molten iron is drawn off. 1. snatch†, —1. jack, n. A flinty rock, found in Missouri, associated with lead ore, carrying specks of sphalerite.—1. liquor, n. Ferrous acetate used as a mordant in dyeing fabrics, etc.—1. loss, n. Elec. The loss of energy because of hysteresis and eddy-currents in the iron portion of an electric machine.—Iron-man, n. 1. One who makes or deals in iron. 2. A coal-cutting machine. 3. An automatic submarine-mine. 4. An apparatus on wheels for supporting a glass-blower's pontil while he is blowing large cylinders, as for window-glass.—Iron-maste'r, n. A manufacturer of iron.—1. mold, n. 1. Stain of iron-rust on cloth or other material. 2. [Eng.] A small chunk of iron ore occasionally found in chalk-beds.—1. oak, n. See SAND OF OAKS.—1. ocher, n. See OCHER.—1. powder, n. Reduced iron. See under REDUCE.—1. pyrites, n. Mineral. Same as PYRITE.—1. red, a. & n. A color like that of iron-rust; crimson.—1. rust, n. See RUST.—1. sand, n. Geol. 1. Sand containing particles of iron ore, usually magnetite. 2. Steel-filings used in fireworks.—1. saw, n. A circular saw for cutting iron.—1. scale, n. 1. Same as FORGE-SCALE. 2. A film of oxid forming on iron.—1. shears, n. 1. A machine for cutting iron plates or bars. 2. A pair of hand-shears for cutting sheet-iron or iron wire.—1. shod, a. With feet protected with or encased in iron; hence, ruthless in marching toward a coveted goal.—1. shot, n. Mineral. Shot or mingled with bits of iron.—1. smith, n. Same as FARRIER, n. The herb of St. Martin. See HERB.—1. sick, a. Neut. Having very rusty bolts and spikes: said of wooden ships.—1.-sided, a. Having iron on every side; hence, rough; rude.—1. spinel, n. Hercynite.—1. stain, n. A stain made by iron.—2. A stain produced in the coffee-plant by a fungus.—1. steel, n. A material formed of iron between steel surfaces, or of steel-covered iron.—1. stone, n. Same as FOREGANGER.—2.—1. sulfate, A salt used in dyeing, tanning, etc.—Iron-ware'r, n. Hardware: iron utensils.—1.-witted, a. Dull; stupid.—1. work, n. Anything made of iron, such as the iron parts of buildings, ships, and machinery.—1.-worker, n. One engaged in manufacturing iron or ironwork.—1. works, n. sing. & pl. An establishment for the manufacture of iron or of heavy ironwork.—1.-yellow, n. See YELLOW.—knocking-down iron (Bookbinding), a small rectangular iron fastened on the laying-press, upon which slips may be beaten in.—lumber-i., n. [Prov. Eng.] One of a pair of forked stanchions on a boat's gunwale to hold extra spars, etc.—magnetic I. (Mineral.), same as MAGNETITE.—malleable I. 1. Cast iron that has been rendered tough and malleable by long-continued high heating while embedded in powdered hematite, ferric oxid, or some other decarbonizing material, and allowed to cool slowly. 2. Wrought iron; forged iron.—metallic I., metal iron, as distinguished from iron ore.—meteoric I. Mineral. Iron alloyed with nickel, as in meteorite.—mine-i., n. Iron made from ore.—mitis i., a very pure iron produced by mitis-casting by the agency of aluminium, and used for malleable castings.—muck-i., n. Iron ready to be rolled or squeezed.—Pacific i. (Naut.), an iron band about a lower yard-arm, to which the boom-iron is secured.—parallel i., a flat piece of iron with parallel faces.—passive i. Iron rendered incredibly inactive by treatment with heat or acids.—pig-i., oblong iron blocks. See PIG, n.—quarter-i., n. Naut. A device on a yard-quarter opening with a hinge to allow the studding-sail booms to be raised or lowered. quarter boom-i.†.—Russia i., a high-grade, smooth, glossy sheet iron, not liable to rust: once made by a process that was long a secret with Russian manufacturers. The sheets were subjected to severe hammering in pits with powdered charcoal between them.—second i. (Whaling), that toggle-iron which is thrown after the first.—silicon i., iron containing 2 to 15 per cent. of silicon: for improving cast iron; ferrosilicon.—silvery i., fine-grained cast iron whose fractures present a silvery appearance.—specular i., same as HEMATITE.—spongy i., reduced iron. See under REDUCE.—structural i., a generic term for all forms of iron and steel used in the construction of buildings, bridges, etc. See CONSTRUCTION, 10 b in irons. 1. To be fettered with irons. 2. To have some *sails full and some aback, so as to be unmanageable: said of a vessel.—to have the i. enter into one's soul, to be desperately grieved or afflicted: suffer extreme anguish of mind.—to have too many irons in the fire, to be engaged in too many enterprises.—to strike while the i. is hot, to engage in an enterprise when circumstances favor.—white i. 1. A hard crystalline cast iron containing combined carbon. 2. Tinned sheet iron.

I'ron, 1 al'ern; 2 i'rŏn, n. Sh. Cosh. xix. 38.

I'ron's, 1 al'ern; 2 i'rŏn's, n. pl. a county in N. W. Michigan, 1,143 sq. m.; county-seat, Crystal Falls. 2. A county in S. E. Missouri; 555 sq. m.; county-seat, Ironton. 3. A county in S. W. Utah; 3,968 sq. m.; county-seat, Parowan. 4. A county in N. Wisconsin; 780 sq. m.; county-seat, Hurley.

I'ron-bark", 1 al'ern-bärk"; 2 i'ern-bärk', n. Any one of various Australian trees of the genus Eucalyptus, having a solid, as opposed to fibrous, stringy, or scaly bark; especially, E. crebra, E. leucoxylon, E. paniculata, E. resinifera, and E. sideriphloia, all of which are large and yield valuable timber.—iron-bark tree; narrow-leaved ironbark†; red ironbark†.—broad-leaved iron-bark, a eucalypt (Eucalyptus siderophloia) yielding heavy whitish wood of great strength.—leguminous I. [Austral.], a fabaceous tree with reddish, close-grained, extremely hard wood.—lemon-scented I., an Australian eucalypt (Eucalyptus staigeriana) whose leaves furnish a lemon-scented oil.

I'ron-bound", etc. See IRON†, n.

Iron Cit'y. Pittsburg, Pa.: so called from its iron factories.

I'ron-clad", 1 al'ern-klad'; 2 i'ern-klăd', a. 1. Covered or clad with iron; protected by iron armor, as a warship; iron-cased: applied loosely also to steel-armored vessels. 2. Not to be evaded or violated; rigorous; as, an ironclad agreement. 3. Able to resist; strong.

Have you an iron-clad constitution which will withstand the wear and tear of late hours, constant traveling, and stage draughts? Youth's Companion (Boston) Aug. 19, 1880, p. 246.

—iron-clad motor, a form of motor in which the armature and field-coils are enclosed and protected by the iron of the field-frame.—I. note (Colloq.), a note, the payment of which is secured by very good collateral.—I. oath, an oath made very strict and specific to prevent evasion; specif. [U. S.], an oath of allegiance required of members of Congress and certain officials shortly after the Civil War.

I'ron-clad", n. 1. A naval vessel having its hull sheathed wholly or in part with iron armor-plates to resist projectiles; applied loosely also to vessels sheathed with steel. 2. Metal. A furnace in which mercury ore is roasted.

I'ron-cloth", etc. See IRON†, n.

I'ron-d, p. Ironed.

I'ron-dale, 1 al'ern-dēl; 2 i'ern-dāl, n. A manufacturing village in Jefferson county, O.

I'ron-e', 1 al-rōn'; 2 i-rōn', n. Org. Chem. A colorless, odorous, decumbyl oil ($C_{10}H_{16}O$), of ketonic nature, occurring in orris-root and the violet isomeric with ionone. [< IRIS.]

I'ron-er, 1 al'ern-ur; 2 i'ern-er, n. One who or that which irons.

I'ron-fa'ced, a. 1. founder, etc. See IRON†, n.

Iron Gates. A defile in the Danube basin between the Carpathians in Hungary and Servia; length, 1½ m.

I'ron-head", 1 al'ern-hed"; 2 i'ern-hĕd', n. [Local, U. S.] The goldeneye (duck).

I'ron-heads", n. The knapweed (Centaurea nigra).

I'ron-i'cal, 1 ai-ron'i-kal; 2 ī-rŏn'i-cal, a. 1. Pertaining to or of the nature of irony; disguising the real meaning; covertly sarcastic.

Ironer Designed for Shirt-bodices.

A figure extremely common in modern American comic literature might be classed as ironical because of its contrast to the mere fun of the thing. MINTO in Chautauquan May, 1891, p. 145.

2. Speaking or writing ironically. 3†. Feigning ignorance. [< eirōnikos, < eirōneia: see IRONY, n.] I-ron'i-cal-ly, adv. I-ron'i-cal-ness, n.

I'ron-ide, 1 ai'ern-aid; 2 i'ern-īd, n. A hard and durable manufactured compound containing gutta-percha: used as a substitute for horn in knife-handles, etc.

I'ron-ing, 1 ai'ern-ing; 2 i'ern-ing, n. 1. The process of pressing and smoothing with flat-irons. 2. The clothes so ironed, collectively; as, a large ironing. 3. The condition which exists when the iron is in contact with the ends of the tuyères of a blast-furnace. 4. [Rare.] The putting (of a person) in irons. 5. The action of arming or fitting with iron.—I.-board", n. A smooth board on which clothes are laid for ironing. It is usually covered with a blanket, and that with a cotton cloth, respectively called I.-blanket and I.-cloth.—I.-box, n. Same as BOX IRON.—I.-mallet, n. A mallet for smoothing seams used for ironing various fabrics, hats, gloves, etc.; particularly, a hat-ironing machine.

I'so-, 1 aī'so-; 2 Ī'sō-. From Greek isos, equal: a combining form, indicating equality or sameness; specif., in chemistry, denoting isomerism; as, isomalic acid, an isomer of malic acid; also, in contradistinction to normal, designating an isomeric compound in which there is one carbon atom or more, which is attached to three other carbon atoms. There are an almost unlimited number of such compounds. In the following lists are included many of the less important not found in vocabulary place.

Words beginning with this prefix will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.

(1) In the following adjectives, iso- signifies isomerism with the compounds or acids indicated by the second elements:

isobilianic	isoferulic	isotartaric
isobutyric	isogeranic	isosaccharic
isocamphoric	isolinoleic	isosuccinic
isocamphoronic	isolinolenic	isosulfocyanic
isocapric	isomalic	isothiocyanic
isocholanic	iso-oleic	iso-uric
isocitric	isophthalic	isovalerilic
isodalaric	isopyromucic

(2) In the following nouns, iso- indicates isomeric compounds:

isoconitin	isoconite	isoparaffin isoallyl	isocoumarin	isophloridzin
isoamyl	isocreatinin	isophorone
isoamylamin	isocyanogen	isophthalyl
isoamylene	isocyanurate	isopropenyl
isoapiol	isodurene	isopropylene
isoasparagin	isoeugenol	isopulegone
isobenzil	isoglutamin	isopurpurin
isoborneol	isohesperidin	isorhamnose
isobutane	isoindol	isorosindulin
isobutylene	isoleucine	isosaccharin
isobutyrate	isomaltose	isosafrol
isocamphor	isomclamin	isothujone
isocarbostyril	isomuscarin	isovanillin
isocholin	isomyristicin	isoxylene

—I'so-ab-nor'mal, n. Meteor. A line connecting places that have the same anomaly or departure from the mean of the latitude; often confused with isanomal.—I'so-ab-nor'mal, a.—I'so-ac'ti-nate, a. Characterized by having both actines alike or identical both in shape and in size.—I'so-ag-glu'ti-nate, v. t. To subject to or to undergo isoagglutination.—I'so-ag-glu'ti-na'tion, n. The process of agglutinating the cells of an animal with cells of the same order from another animal of the same species.—I'so-ag-glu'ti-na'tive (ēv), a. Of or pertaining to an agglutinative reaction caused by a blood-serum of the same species of animal. [< Gr. isochronos, < isos, equal, + chronos, color.]—I'so-cla'site, n. Mineral. A vitreous to pearly, snow-white, hydrous calcium phosphate ($H_4Ca_2P_2O_9$), crystalling in the monosymmetric system.—I'so-cli'nal. Geol. 1. a. Dipping at the same angle and in the same direction; said of folded strata. II. n. An incline.—Isoclinal fold (Geol.), a straightangle fold whose sides have parallel dips; it may be an anticline or a syncline, and either (1) vertical, (2) overturned — that is, forced over into an oblique position — or (3) recumbent — that is, brought over into nearly or quite a horizontal position.—I'so-cline, n. Geol. A fold in which the strata are so closely appressed that the sides are parallel.—I'so-clin'ic, a. & n. Geol. 1. Same as ISOCLINAL. 2. Having an equal dip of the magnetic needle.—isoclinic line. 1. A line connecting places that have the same magnetic dip. isoclinal line. 2. An isoclinal ray.—I'so-clī'no-stat, n. An instrument for dividing any angle or angles into any number of equal parts. I'so-kli'no-stat;—I'so-cne'mic, a. Denoting, in a certain group of cotenterates, a unilateral pair formed by two equal mesenteries.—I'so-cœ'lous, a. See ISO-.—I'so-cœ'lous, a. Ornith. Relating to that form of the intestine in birds where the second and third loops are closed and left-handed.—I'so-cœ'ly, n. Anat. & Phys. A metrical system containing cola or members of the same length. 2. Rhet. (1) The use of two or more cola or clauses successively, each having the same length. (2) Parallelism. (3) A period composed of clauses of equal length.—I'so-col'ic, a.—I'so-com'ple-ment, n. In the theory of toxins, a complement from the same species as that of the antibacterior.—I'so-com'ple-men''to-phil'ic, a. Relating to an affinity for isocomplements.—I'so-co'ri-a, n. Med. Equality in size or diameter of the pupils of two eyes.—I'so-cor'y-bul'bin, n. Chem. An alkaloid ($C_{19}H_{21}O_4N$) derived from the roots of certain plants of the genus Capnoides.—I'so-cor''y-bul'binet.—I'so-cra-cy, n. [-CIES, pl.] Equality in government; government in which all have equal power.—I'so-crat, n. A supporter of isocratic rule.—I'so-crat'ic, a.

I-soc'ra-tes, 1 aī-sok'rə-tēz; 2 ī-sŏk'rə-tēz, n. (436–338 B. C.) One of the ten great Athenian orators; he taught rhetoric to Timotheus and others; committed suicide in despair after the battle of Chæronea.

I-soc'u-la-tize, n. [-TIZED; -TIZ'ING.] I. t. To render isocratic by force. II. i. To put into practise the principles of isocracy.—I'so-cro-ton'ic, a. Chem. Designating an acid (CH_3CHOH) isomeric with crotonic acid.—I'so-cry'nal. a. A. Pertaining to isocrymes. B. Same as ISOCRYMIC. I'so-cry-mic'. II. n. An isocryme.—I'so-cryme, n. A line joining points on the surface of the ocean which have the same temperature at the coldest season.—I'so-cy-a'nate, n. Chem. A salt of isocyanic acid.—I'so-cy-an'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or containing an isomeric form of cyanic acid.—Isocyanic acid, a compound of cyanogen and hydrogen only in combination, and exists in certain organic preparations called isocyanates.—I'so-cy'a-nid, I'so-cy'a-nide, n. Chem. Same as ISOCYANATE.—I'so-cy'a-nin, n. Chem. A salt of fulminuric acid.—I'so-cy''a-nu'ric, a. Same as FULMINURIC.—I'so-cy'clic, a. Chem. Possessing or relating to a closed chain of atoms of the same kind.—I'so-cy'clous, a. Zool. Composed of like rings.—I'so-cy'clus, n. [-CLI, pl.] An isocyclous animal.—I'so-cy't'ic, a. Bot. Having cells of equal size.—I'so-cy''to-tox'in, n. A cell-poison which destroys cells of a certain variety similar to those which produce the poison.—I'so-dac'ty-li, n. pl. Ornith. The Zygodactyli.—I'so-dac'ty-lous, a. Having toes alike: zygodactylous.—I'so-dac'tyle, a. Same as isodactylous to the same extent.—isodemic lines, lines on a map which pass through all points of equal density of population.—I'so-dense, n. Meteor. A line connecting points at which the density of the atmosphere is the same.

I'so-dĭ'a, 1 aī-sō-dī'ə; 2 ī-sō-dī'ä, n. pl. Gr. Ch. The feast of the Presentation of the Virgin Mary in the Temple, kept on November 21. [< Gr. eisodos, of entrance, < eis, into, + hodos, way.]

I'so-di''a-bat'ic, a. Relating to the absorption or emission of equal quantities of heat by a substance under equal changes of its condition; as, the isodiabatic parts of an isothermal curve. [< ISO- + Gr. diabatikos, < diabainō, pass through.]

—I'so-di''a-bat'ic, n. Meteor. A curve representing isothermal pressure and volume changes while the same quantity of heat is being transferred to a substance or from it.—I'so-di''a-met'ric, a. 1. Bot. Equal in the three dimensions opposed to dianisic or dianisodiametric: said of certain cells in the parenchyma of plants. 2. Crystal. Denoting crystals in the hexagonal and tetragonal systems which are developed alike in the directions of the lateral axes, but differently in the directions of the vertical axes. I'so-di''a-met'ri-cal.—I'so-di'a-phore, n. Meteor. A line connecting places at which there is an equal difference between the values of an element during two specified months of the year, as between the mean January temperature and the mean July temperature.

I-sod'i-con, 1 aī-sod'ĭ-kŏn; 2 ī-sŏd'ĭ-cŏn, n. [-CA, pl.] Gr. Ch. A short anthem sung while the book of the Gospels is carried into the body of the church and through the Royal Doors into the bema. [Gr. eisodos, entrance, < eis, into, + hodos, way.] el-sod'i-con‡.

I'so-dic'ty-al, a. Possessing meshes of equal dimensions and identical in shape.—I'so-di-me'tric, a. Same as ISOMETRIC. The phenomenon in which two substances are correspondingly homeomorphous and dimorphous.—I'so-di-mor'phic, a. I'so-di-mor'phous.—I'so-dip'y-rite, n. See ISO-.—I'so-dō-murp, n. Arch. Masonry having courses of uniform thickness, the blocks being of equal length and the vertical joints over the middle of the blocks of the next lower course. I'so-dō-mur'ic, I'so-dō-mur'ous, a.—I'so-dont, a. Anat. Possessing teeth that do not vary in form, as those of snakes.—I'so-don'tal, n. pl. A division of bivalves with two cardinal teeth in each valve interlocking with those of the opposite valve, as in spondylids, etc.—I'so-dont, I'so-don'tous, a.—I'so-drome, n. Naval. The manner of a fleet's passing from one formation to another, changing the direction 90 degrees by courses equal in length for every ship: not practised in the U. S. navy, as involving the risk of collision. 2. Meteor. The isogram indicating the difference between the spring and autumn temperatures in any specified locality.—I'so-dul'cite, n. Chem. A sweet crystalline compound ($C_6H_{14}O_6$) derived from the active principles of certain plants, as Quercus tinctoria, Rhamnus infectorius, etc. When heated to 100° it is converted into amorphous isodulcitan ($C_6H_{12}O_5$), and when oxidized with dilute nitric acid it yields isodulcitic acid ($C_6H_{10}O_8$).—I'so-dul-cit'ic, I'so-dul'ci-ton'ic, a.—I'so-dy-nam', n. Meteor. A line of equal force; especially, a line connecting places at which the wind-force is the same; an isanemone.—I'so-dy-na'mi-a, n. A state in which there is an equality of force; an isodynamic state.—I'so-dy-nam'ic. I. a. Relating to equality of force. I'so-dy-nam't-cal†. II. n. Any line on the earth's surface at all points of which the intensity of terrestrial magnetism is the same. Isodynamic line†.—Isodynamic equivalents, the respective amounts of isodynamic foods.—I. foods having the same heat-producing value.—I'so-dy-nam'o-gen'ic, a. Possessing equal dynamogenic qualities.—I'so-di'a-phe'rism, n. Same as ISODYNAMIC. 2. Same as ISOBRIOUS.—I'so-el'do-mal, a. Isodomal.—I'so-el'do-nal†.—I'so-e-lec'tric, a. Possessing equal quantities of electricity.—Isoelectric point (Phys. Chem.), that point in a colloidal solution where electrolytic movement in either direction is suspended and precipitation or coagulation results from the introduction into the solution of a very small quantity of an electrolyte.—I'so-em'o-din, n. A laxative obtained from buckthorn-bark.—I'so-en-er-get'ic, a. Denoting equal amounts of energy. I'so-e-ner'get.—I'so-eph'e-drin, n. See ISO-.—I'so-e'ral, n. Meteor. A line connecting places having the same mean temperature in spring. Isoeral line†.—I'so-e-ta'ce-e, n. pl. Bot. A heterosporous family of vascular cryptogamous plants of the order Isoetales. There is but one genus, Isoetes. I'so-e'te-ot.—I'so-e-ta'ceous, a.—I'so-e-ta'les, n. pl. Bot. An order of fern allies usually classified with the Lycopodiales.—I-so-e'tes, n. Bot. The sole genus of the quillworts. See ISOETACEÆ and QUILLWORT.—I'so-form, n. Pharm. A powder, possessing antiseptic properties, which is prepared from equal parts of calcium phosphate and paraiodoacetol.—I'so-gam'ete, n. Biol. Either of the two protoplasmic masses which combine in isogamy.—I-sog'a-my, n. Biol. The conjugation of two protoplasmic masses which are not clearly differentiated into a male and a female element.—I'so-gam'ic, I-sog'a-mous, a.—I'so-gen, n. Anthrop. A line on a chart or diagram representing the ages of persons in various combinations, the same being associated with the birth-rate average: a term suggested by Prof. F. Galton.—I'so-gen'ding'ti, n. (Malay.) See ANDA-BERAS. 2. Bot. Like origin.—I'so-gen'o-typ'ic, a. Having the same genotype: said of two genera based on the same type species.—I-sog'o-ny, n. Biol. Coalescence of ovules.—I'so-ge-nous'ic, a. Isogonic.—I-sog'o-nous, a. Having a similarity of origin.—I'so-ge'o-therm, n. A line or surface along which the earth, below its surface, has the same temperature.—I'so-ge'o-ther'mal, I'so-ge'o-ther'mic, a.—I-sog'no-thism, n. The condition of having the jaws equally projecting.—I-sog'na-thous, a.—I'so-gon, n. Geom. A figure whose angles are all equal. I'so-gon'al†.—I'so-gon'ic†, a. The same magnetic variation or declination.—I'so-gon'ics†, n. Biol. Characterized by isogonism.—I'so-go'ni-o-stat, n. An appliance for regulating the inclination of a pencil point in a spectroscope.—I-sog'o-nism, n. Biol. The production of like generative individuals from differing stocks, as in certain hydroids.—I'so-gra'fist†, n. Meteor. A line connecting places at which the gradient of any event is the same.—I'so-gram, n. 1. Math. A diagram of curves showing the relation between three variables. 2. Meteor. The generic name for a line on a chart or diagram connecting those points at which equality of some physical condition exists or is assumed to exist.—I'so-graph, n. An instrument used in drawing, composed of two arms connected by a sliding bar and joint, marked with a scale of degrees.—I-sog'ra-phy, n. 1. The art of making facsimiles, as of manuscripts or autographs. 2. The art of making isographic projections.—I'so-graph'ic, I'so-graph'i-cal, a.—I'so-graph'i-cal-ly, adv.—I-sog'y-nous, a. Bot. Having the pistils, or the carpels of the compound pistil, of the same number as the stamens.—I'so-gyre, n. Optics. A dark ring occurring in interference figures. It represents a line along which the direction of polarization is constant. Such markings are usually shaped like crosses or hyperbolas.—I'so-gy'ric, I'so-gy'rous, a.—I'so-hal'sine, n. A line joining the points of equal salinity in the waters of the ocean.—I'so-hel, n. Meteor. A line connecting places having equal duration of sunshine. Isohelic line†.—I'so-hem'ag-glu'ti-nate, vt. & i. To effect isohemagglutination.—I'so-hem'ag-glu'ti-na'tion. n. The agglutination of the red blood-corpuscles by the serum of normal individuals of the same species.—I'so-hem'o-ly'sin, n. A lysin that causes disintegration of red blood-corpuscles in another animal of the same species.—I'so-hex'a-hed'ral, a. Chem. See ISO-.—I'so-hu'mic, a. Containing or indicating on a map equal percentages of humus in the soil.—I'so-hy'dric, a. Phys. Chem. Characterized by the same tension with hydrogen gas as are present in like concentration.—I'so-hy'e-tose. 1. a. Relating to or indicating equality of rainfall. I'so-hy'e-tal. II. n. A line on the earth's surface along which the rainfall is the same. I'so-hy'et‡; I'so-hy'e-tal‡; Isohyetal line†; Isohyetose line†.—I'so-hy'gro-me'tric, a. Similar in the average amount of moisture in the atmosphere.—I'so-hyp, n. A line drawn from one isohypsometric district to another.—I'so-hyp'er-cy-to'sis, n. Increase in the total number of white corpuscles in the blood, the different varieties maintaining the normal percentage relations to each other.—I'so-hyp'po-cy-to'sis, n. Decrease in the total number of white corpuscles in the blood, the different varieties maintaining the normal percentage relations to each other.—I'so-hyp'so-met'ric, a. Lying at the same elevation above the sea-level.—I'so-hyst, n. Same as ISOHYET.—I'so-keph'a-lous, a.—I'so-kil'no-stat, see ISOCHRONALLY, etc.—I'so-ke-rau'nic, I'so-ke'rau-no-graph'ic, etc. a. Same as ISOCERAUNIC, etc.

I'so-kok'tes, n. Same as ISOCRATES.

I'so-lac'tose, n. Same as ISO-.

I'so-la del'la Sca'la [I'zo-lä del'la skä'la; 2 I'so-lä dĕl'lä-skä'lä. 3. of Verona. A town and commune in Verona province, Italy, 13 m. S. of Verona.

I'so-la del Li'ri, [I'zo-lä del lī'rī; 2 I'so-lä dĕl lī'rī. A commune on the island of Liri, in Caserta province, Italy.

I'so-la Gros'sa, [I'zo-lä gros'sä. A small island in the Adriatic sea; off Dalmatia; 27 by 3 m. I'so-la Lun'ga†.

I'so-pha'bi-a, n. Morbid dread of being alone.

i'so-late, I is'o-[or ai'so-]lēt; 2 is'o-[or ai'so-]lāt (XIII), vt. [-LAT'ED; -LAT'ING.] 1. To place in a detached or insulated situation; separate from others of its kind.

Keep in the midst of life. Do not isolate yourself.
DRUMMOND Addresses, Supreme Gift p. 37. [R. H. B.]

2. Elec. To insulate. 3. Chem. To obtain in a free or uncombined state, as an element. [< It. isolato, pp. of isolare, < isola, island, < L. insula; see INSULA.]—Isolated pawn (Chess), a pawn so situated as to have no other pawns of the same color on adjoining files and no hostile pawn in front.—i'so-la-bi(ē'[XIII), a. Capable of being isolated: specif., in chemistry, that may be obtained pure and uncombined.—i'so-late, i'so-lat'ed, a. 1. Standing alone; detached from others. 2. Chem. Free from combination.—i'so-lat'ed-ly, adv.

i'so-late, n. An isolated concept.

Attention is paid to certain qualities of objects to the exclusion of others, a process termed by the author [C. Lloyd Morgan] isolation, the products being isolates.
The Monist (Chicago) Apr., 1891, p. 445.

i'so-la'tion, I is'o-[or ai'so-]lē'shən; 2 is'o-[or i'so-]lā'shən, pa. Philol. Having simple, uninflected roots: said of monosyllabic languages. See ISOLATIVE, a.

i'so-la'tion, I is'o-[or ai'so-]lē'shən; 2 is'o-[or i'so-]lā'shən, n. The act of isolating, the state of being isolated; insulation.

Isolation tends to exaggerate.
C. D. WARNER Backlog Studies study vi, p. 145. [o. a. o. 1873.]

—indiscriminate isolation, the process of setting apart the individuals constituting a species into separate divisions without selecting each particular one.

i'so-la'tion-ist, I is'o-[or ai'so-]lē'shən-ist; 2 is'o-[or i'so-]lā'shən-ist, n. One who or that which isolates; specif., an insulator.

i-sol'de', I i-sōld'; 2 i-sōld', n. Knit. F. V'souite', 1 i-sōōt', 2 i-sōōt'. See V'SOUITE, 1.—I-sol'da, I i-sōl'da; 2 i-sōl'da. Medical Legend. Same as ISEULT.

i'so-l'chen-in, I ai'so-lik'en-in; 2 i'so-l'chēn-in, n. Chem. An amorphous carbohydrate similar to and occurring with lichenin in Iceland moss.

i-sol'o-gous, I ai-sol'o-gus; 2 i-sŏl'o-ġŭs, a. Having similar differences in composition: applied in chemistry to those groups of substances which correspond with a constant difference of two hydrogen atoms in their composition, but which are identical in their carbon composition; thus ethane (C_2H_6), ethene (C_2H_4), and acetylene (C_2H_2) are isologous.—I'so-log, n. See ISOLOGOUS, a.—I'so-log, n. One of an isologous group or series.

I'so-l'ma, I ai'so-lī'ma; 2 i'so-lī'ma, n. Bot. A genus of tropical Asiatic gamopetalous plants characterized by opposite leaves, often villous, and tubular flowers, red, golden or spotted, having the disk 5-lobed. There are numerous species and varieties, all with fringed flowers.

i'so-ly'sin, n. A lysin, or destructive poison, in the blood of an animal which will destroy the red corpuscles in the blood of another animal of the same species.—i'so-ly'sis, n. See ISOLYSIN.—I'so-ly'sis, n. The destructive action of, or morbid condition produced by, an isolysin.—I'so-ly'tic, a.—I'so-mal'lous, a. See ISOMALLOUS.—I'so-mal'ta, n. Pharm. Having like flagella.—I'so-mas'ti-go'da, n. pl. Protoz. An order of flagellate infusorians with 2 to 5 similar flagella and nutritive, holophytic, including Uroglena.—I'so-mas'ti-go'dan, a.—I'so-me'nal, n. Meteor. A line connecting places at which the mean monthly value of an element is the same: an isomenal line.

I'so-mer, I ai'so-mur; 2 i'so-mer, n. A member of an isomeric group; one of several substances characterized by isomerism. [< Gr. isomerēs, with equal parts, < isos, equal, + meros, part, < mermomai, share.]

I-som'e-ra, I ai-som'e-ra; 2 i-sŏm'e-ra, n. pl. Entom. A division of beetles with the tarsal joints typically the same in number on all the legs, including most species.

I-som'er-ase, I ai-som'ur-ās; 2 i-sŏm'er-āz, n. Zool. A homologous part or aggregate. 2. Chem. An isomer. [< Gr. isomerēs; see ISOMER.]

Many organic bodies, although being composed of exactly the same number of the same elements, appear to be entirely distinct from one another, and, in fact, are entirely distinct, as regards their physical and chemical properties, . . . of which turpentine, camphor, and tartaric acid are several examples.
PRINCE KROPOTKIN in Nineteenth Century Aug., 1893, p. 250.

I'so-mer'ic, I ai'so-mer'ik; 2 i'so-mĕr'ik, a. 1. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or exhibiting the property of isomerism.

Bodies which, like acetic acid and methyl formate, have the same ultimate composition are called isomeric.
Encyc. Brit. (9th ed.) XIII, p. 154. [i. n. & co.]

2. Zool. Of or pertaining to an isomere.

i-som'er-id, I ai-som'ur-id, -id or -id; 2 i-sŏm'er-id, -id or -id, n. Chem. A peptide. See -ID.

i-som'er-ism, I ai-som'ur-izm; 2 i-sŏm'er-ĭzm, n. Chem. The condition of having different chemical or physical properties, or both, but identical ultimate composition: also, in a restricted sense, of compounds having the same percentage composition and molecular weight. Butyric acid and acetic ether, each of which has the formula $C_4H_8O_2$, are isomeric with each other. Isomerism is now generally explained on the theory that the atoms in isomeric molecules are differently arranged or grouped in space. For the various kinds of isomerism see phrases below, and also ALLOISOMERISM; ASYMMETRIC CARBON ATOM; METAMERISM; POLYMERISM; STEREOISOMERISM; TAUTOMERISM.

In that condition of boiled white albumin which is described as isomerism, there are atoms alike in number, nature, and relative proportion, so grouped as somehow to produce compounds having very different chemical properties.
MACDALEY Body and Mind pt. ii, p. 231. [A. 1875.]

i-som'er-ize, I ai-som'ur-īz; 2 i-sŏm'er-īz, n. 1. Chem. To change into an isomeric modification. 2. Biol. To become isomeric.—i-som'er-i-za'tion, n. Chem. A result showing isomeric qualities of a group of substances.—I-som'er-o-mor'phism, n. Crystal. Isomorphism between isomers.

I-som'er-ous, I ai-som'ur-us; 2 i-sŏm'er-ŭs, a. 1. Bot. Equal in number, as the members of the successive circles of a flower. 2. Entom. Of or pertaining to the Isomera. 3. Chem. Of or pertaining to isomerism. 4. Having the ridges of the molars alike in number, as the existing elephants. See ISOMER.

I'so-met'e-or'ic, I ai'so-mī'te-or'ik; 2 i'so-mē'te-or'ik, a. Meteor. Denoting or representing equality of meteorological phenomena: as, isometeoric charts.

I'so-met'o-po'ral, I ai'so-met'o-pō'ral; 2 i'so-mēt'o-pō'ral, n. Meteor. A line connecting places having the same mean temperature in autumn. Called also isometeoral line.
[< isos- + Gr. metopōron, late autumn.]

I'so-met'ric, I ai'so-met'rik; 2 i'so-mĕt'rik, a. Of equal measure. Specif.: (1) In crystallography, developed alike in three axial directions at right angles to one another; also, of or pertaining to that system of crystallization in which the three axes are of equal length. See CRYSTALLIZATION. (2) In geometrical drawing, measured on an equal scale in every one of three sets of lines 120° apart, and representing the three planes of dimension. See PROJECTION. [< Gr. isometros, < isos, equal, + metron, measure.] I'so-met'ri-cal†.—isometric contraction, contraction of a muscle when acted on by a relatively large resistance.—I. line, in a thermodynamic diagram, lines denoting constant volume.—I'so-met'ri-cal-ly, adv.

I'so-met'rics, n. Thermodynamics. An isometric line.—I'so-met'ro-graph, n. An instrument for drawing or ruling equidistant parallel lines, as in cross-hatching.—I'so-me-tro'pi-a, n. Med. Equality of the focus-lengths of the two eyes.—Isometry, n. Equality in measured parts or proportions; specif.: (1) Geog. Equality of elevation, as of mountain peaks. (2) In isometric projection, the relation of corresponding lines to one another.

I'so-morph, I ai'so-môrf; 2 i'so-môrf, n. Biol. An organism superficially like another but morphologically different. [< isos- + Gr. morphē, form.]

I'so-mor'phic, I ai'so-mär'fik; 2 i'so-môr'fic, a. 1. Having the same form or construction: said of two sets of things, the parts and structure of the one corresponding to those of the other; having isomorphism. 2. Biol. See Crystal. Having isomorphism.

I'so-mor'phism, I ai'so-mär'fizm; 2 i'so-môr'fĭsm, n. 1. Crystal. The phenomenon shown by two substances of analogous chemical composition that crystallize in identical or nearly identical forms, the two thus possessing in groups of being isomorphic. 3. Biol. The possession of like characters by organisms of different groups, resulting usually from like environmental influences.

In the same year Mitscherlich's law was propounded,—the law of isomorphism, according to which atoms of elements of the same class may replace each other in a compound without altering its crystalline structure.
G. P. FISHER Univ. Hist. p. 622. [i. n. a. co. 1885.]

—cogredient isomerism (Stalk.), isomerism resulting from transforming the operations of a group by one of those operations.—contragredient i., a non-cogredient isomorphism.—i. of the first kind, isomerism, the identity of the form of two groups.—meriedric i., the isomorphism of two groups, one of which has more substitution forms than the other.—multiple i., the condition of being multiply isomorphic.

I'so-mor'phous, I ai'so-mor'fus; 2 i'so-môr'fŭs, a. Crystal. Exhibiting isomorphism; isomorphic.

I'so-my'a, I ai'so-mī'a; 2 i'so-mī'a, n. pl. Conch. An order of bivalves with two nearly equal muscles, as in most species. [< isos- + Gr. mys, muscle.]—I'so-my-a'ri-an, a. Conch. Having two nearly equal muscles, as Isomya or most Dimyaria.

I'son, I ai'son; 2 i'sŏn, n. Gr. Ch. Mus. The sign for the keynote. [< Gr. ison, equal.]

-ison, suffix. Derived from the Latin -atio through the French -aison: used in certain nouns; as, comparison, garrison, orison, reason, season, trespass.

I'so-nan'dra, I ai'so-nan'dra; 2 i'so-năn'dra, n. Bot. A small mainly East-Indian genus of trees of the star-apple family (Sapotaceæ), with flowers in axillary congested clusters, and small flowers in axillary glomerules. Some species yield a gutta-percha substitute. [< isos- + Gr. anēr (andr-), man.]

I'so-neph, I ai'so-nef; 2 i'so-nĕf, n. Meteor. An isonephic line.—I'so-ne'phel'ic, a. Showing an equal prevalence of cloudiness.—isonephelic lines, lines drawn through points of the earth's surface equally liable to cloudiness.

I'so-neph'ric-ha'ri-a, n. A condition directed against the renal cells of the same species as that from which the nephrotoxin was derived.—I'so-ner'gic, a. Physics. Same as isochronal.—I'so-nic'o-tin, n. A ferment with nicotic acid.—isonicotic acid, a crystalline compound ($C_6H_5NO_2$) formed by the oxidation of nicotin.—I'so-nic'o-tin, I'so-nic'o-tine, n. A white crystalline compound ($C_6H_4N_2$) isomeric with nicotin and contained in tobacco, etc.—I'so-nic'o-tin'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or containing isonicotin or its derivatives.—I'so-nif'ro-sal, n. Chem. Same as CARBAMIN.—I'so-nif'ril‡.—I'so-ni'tro, n. Chem. An imaginary divalent radical supposed to be present in some organic compounds.—I'so-ni-tro'so, n. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or containing the imaginary acidradical or group NOH: generally used as a combining form.

I'son'o-my, I ai'son'o-mi; 2 i'sŏn'o-my, n. 1. Equality of will rights. 2. Equality in any kind, or in their representation. [< Gr. isonomia, < isos, equal, + nomos, allotment, < nemō, assign.] I'so-no'mi-a†.—I'so-nom'ic, a.

I'so-nor'mal-ox'a-lu'ri-a, n. Excretion in the urine of normal oxalic acid or group NOH: generally used as a combining form.

I'so-nu'cle-o'sis, n. Physiol. That state of the blood in which the white corpuscles are normal both in number and in the percentage relations of the different forms to each other.—I'so- + NORMAL + Gr. kytos, cell.

I'so-nym, I ai'so-nim; 2 i'sŏ-nĭm, n. A paronym. [< Gr. isos, equal, + onyma, name.]—I'so-nym'ic, a.—I-son'y-my, n.

I-son'zo, I i-sōn'tsō; 2 i-sŏn'tsō, n. A river rising from the Alps to Gulf of Trieste; crossed by Italians June 2, 1915.

i-sop'a-chous, a. Of equal thickness.—I'so-pag, n. Meteor. A line connecting places at which rain falls continuously for the same number of days in winter.—I'so-par'the-no-gen'e-sis, n. Established parthenogenesis.

I'so-pec'tic, n. Meteor. A line on a chart connecting points at which the first snow-fall of the winter occurs simultaneously.—I'so-pel'le-tier'in, n. Chem. One of several alkaloids ($C_8H_{13}NO$) isolated from rootbark of Punica granatum.—I'so-pep'sin, n. An isomeric modification of pepsin obtained by exposing it to a temperature of from 40° to 60° C.—I'so-per'i-cor'lous, a. Ornith. Having the second of the loops of the intestine around the third, and all similarly rolled.—I'so-pe-rim'e-ter, n. Geom. A figure which has a perimeter equal with that of another figure; in the plural, two or more figures having equal perimeters.—I'so-per'i-met'ric, I'so-per'i-met'ri-cal, a. 1. Of or pertaining to isoperimetry. 2. Having equal perimeters. I'so-pe-rim'e-trist.—isoperimetric figures (plane geometry), 3 figures with equal boundaries.—I. problems, see PROBLEM.—I'so-pe-rim'e-try, n. Geom. The science, quality, or relation of figures having equal perimeters; the consideration of questions like the problem of finding the figure of maximum area having a perimeter of given length.—I'so-pet'a-lous, a. Bot. Having equal petals.—I-soph'a-gy, n. An assimilation of its like: said of the union of male and female generative cells.—I-soph'a-genus, a.—I'so-phane, n. In phenology, an isochrone of the first blossoming of a specified plant; an ianthesic line.—I'so-pha'sal, a. Astron. Denoting or characterized by equality of phases.—I'so-phasm, n. Meteor. An isogram indicating the range of barometric pressure over a given area.—I'so-phe''no-log'i-cal, a. In phenological investigations, pertaining to iso-phenological line.—I'so-phe-nom'e-nal, a. Possessing like phenomena; specif., noting a line, as on a map, through points where plants or animals of any sort are commensurate.—I'so-phone, n. A telephone transmitter with a microphonic attachment.—I'so-pho'ri-a, n. Med. Equal tension of the muscles of the eyes, so that the visual axes keep in the same plane.—i-soph'o-rous, a. Transformable into something else.—I'so-pho'tal, a. A line running through all equally lighted points in the illuminated field. I'so-phote;.—I'so-pho-tog'ra-phy, n. The photography of objects in their actual dimensions.—I'so-phyl-ly, n. Bot. The state or condition of having all the leaves alike.—I'so-phyl'lous, a.—I'so-phyl'told, n. A compound plant individual, or phytoid, not fully developed.—I-so'pi-a, n. Equal acuity of vision in the two eyes: a very unusual occurrence.—I'so-pi-es'tic, a. Showing equal pressure; isobaric; as, isopiestic lines.—I'so-pi-es'ti-cal-ly, adv.—I'so-plere, n. [Rare.] Thermodynam. An isometric line.—I'so-plet'ic, a. Applied to lines indicating similarities in the relation of any given fact to two coordinates.—I'so-pleu'ra, n. pl. Conch. A subclass or other division of gastropods with the body and viscera bilaterally symmetrical, as in the chitons, neomenians, and chaetoderms.—I'so-pleu'ral, a.—I'so-pleu'ran, a. & n.—I'so-pleu'rous, a.—I'so-pli'ce-sose, a. Of or pertaining to geographical areas possessing an equal amount of rainfall.

I'so-pod, 1 aĭ'so-pod; 2 I'so-pŏd. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Isopoda. II. n. One of the Isopoda. [< iso- + Gr. pous (pod-), foot.] —I-sop'o-dan, n. An order or suborder of sessile-eyed crustaceans, especially those having the body depressed and arched, thoracic segments free with nearly similar legs, and lamiar abdominal legs, functioning as gills, as in the pill bugs.—I'so-pog'o-dan, I'so-pode, a. & n.—I-sop'o-dous, a.—I'so-pod'i-mor'phous, a. Entom. Having the appearance of an isopod, as the larva of the coleopterous family Cucujidæ.

I'so-pog'o-nous, a. Having both webs equal: said of feathers.—I'so-pol'i-ty, n. Reciprocity of civil rights; the right of a citizen of one state or country to hold land in another. I-sop'o-lite;.—I'so-pol'i-tal, a.—I'so-por'i-dus, n. pl. Zoöph. Same as MADREPORIDÆ. I-sop'o-ra, n. (t. s.) I'so-pral, n. Chem. A colorless crystalline compound, $C_4H_6Cl_3CH(OH)$ or Cl_3) employed as a hypnotic.—I'so-pre-clp'i-tin, n. A precipitin reacting only to serum from an animal of the same species as that from which the precipitin itself was derived.—I'so-prene, n. A volatile hydrocarbon (C_5H_8), polymeric with caoutchin, obtained when caoutchouc and gutta-percha are subjected to dry distillation.—I'so-pro'pyl, n. Chem. The monovalent organic radical $-CH(CH_3)_2$.—I'so-pro'pyla-cet'ic, a. Chem. Noting an acid equivalent to isovaleric acid. See under VALERIC.—I'so-pro''pyl-to'lu-ene, n. Chem. Cymene.—I'so-pter, n. In ancient Greek verse, having an equivalent numerical value: said of compared words in which the numeral value of the letters equals the same sum. II. n. pl. Words so compared with another, has the same numerical value.—I'so-pseph'ism, n.—I'so-psy'chric, a. Physics. Relating to or noting states or processes in which evaporation and condensation balance.—I'sopsychric curve, a curve of temperature and of vapor.—I'so-psy'chric, n.—I-sop'ter, n. A line drawn to indicate points of equal visual acuity of the retina.—I-sop'ter-ous, a. pl. Of or pertaining to the suborder of Neuroptera.—I-sop'ter-ous, a. 1. Of or pertaining to the Isoptera. 2. Having nearly equal fore and hind wings, as certain insects.—I'so-pur'pu-rate, n. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or containing an isomeric modification of purpuric acid.—isopurpuric acid, a compound ($C_8H_5N_5O_7$) isomeric with purpuric acid, and known only in its salts, which are called isopurpurates.—I'so-pur'pu-rin, n. Chem. A coal-tar derivative ($C_{14}H_8O_4$) resembling alizarin, and used similarly to produce a yellowish-red color on fabrics.—I'so-pyc, n. A line denoting equal density. I'so-pyc, a. 1. a. Physics. Exhibiting equality of density: said of surfaces through a body along which the density is uniform. II. n. An isopycnic surface. I'so-pyc'nal, a.—I'so-pyc'nic, a. Same as ISODENSE.—I'so-pyre, n. Mineral. A variety of pyrophane or impure opal.—I'so-py'ro-mu'cic, a. Naming an acid resulting from the distillation of mucic acid with potassium bisulfate.—I'sor'cin, n. Chem. A crystalline compound (CrH_8O_3) formed synthetically by fusing bromoparacresol. I-sor'el-noi', I'so-rod-si'lic, a. pl. See INFUSORIA.—I'sor-rhyth'mic, a. Anc. Pros. Having a number of times for arsis and thesis, as a dactyl (— ⏑ ⏑), anapest (⏑ ⏑ —), or spondee (— —), two shorts being equal to one long.—I'sor-sce'nis, n. Physics. A line connecting points of equal atoms.—I'sor-rop'ic, a. Math. Of or pertaining to a line or curve passing through those points of a plane for which the value of a function is the same.—I'so-sa'frol, n. Same as ISOSAFROL.

I-sos'ce-les, 1 aĭ-sos'ĕ-lĭz; 2 ĭ-sŏs'ĕ-lēz, n. Geom. Having two sides that are equal; as, an isosceles triangle. [L., < Gr. isoskelēs, < isos, equal, + skelos, leg.] I-sos'ce-lar†, —I-sos'ce-les-ism, n. The state of being isosceles.

I'so-scope, n. An instrument used by surveyors for measuring the slight tilting that occurs in horizontal and vertical lines when the eyes are raised or lowered.—I'so-sco'po-lam'in, n. A mydriatic alkaloid.—I'so-sco''po-lam'ine,—I'so-sels'mal, n. A line indicating localities where an earthquake has acted with equal intensity.—I'so-sels'mal, a.—I'so-sel'sic, a.—I'so-sel'sis, n. A line connecting points where an earthquake was felt simultaneously. 2. Isoseismal.—I'sos-mot'ic, a. 1. Exerting equal osmotic pressure. 2. Indicating a solution in which at the same temperature there are an identical number of molecules of a dissolved substance per unit volume. Compare OSMOTIC.—I'so-so'nus, n. Entom. 1. A genus of chalcidid flies, including the pine-pitch-moth parasite Tasonia hordati. 2. [l-] An insect of this genus in its broadest sense.—I'so-spon'dy-li, n. pl. Ich. An order of physostomous fishes having the anterior vertebræ generally like the following, a mesocoracoid, and the post-temporals articulating with the sides of the skull, as in the salmon, herring, etc.: malacopterygians.—I'so-spon'dy-lous, a.—I'so-spon'dy-lous, a.—I'so-spore, n. 1. An isosporous plant. 2. Same as ZYGOSPORE. 3. Protoz. One of the spores of colonial radiolarians that represent the usual radiolarian spores and develop directly.—I'so-spo'rous, a. Bot. Having only one kind of spores; homosporous. I'so-spor'ic†.

I-sos'ta-sy, 1 aĭ-sos'ta-sĭ; 2 ĭ-sŏs'ta-sy. n Geol. The theoretical condition of equilibrium which the earth's surface tends to assume under the action of terrestrial gravitation, as affected by the transference of material from regions of denudation to those of deposition, and by differences in density in various portions of the earth's mass near to the surface. I-sos'ta-cy†.—I'so-sta'tic, a. Of or pertaining to isostasy. I'so-stat'i-cal†.—I'so-stat'i-cal-ly, adv.

I'so-stath, n. Meteor. A line connecting points of equal density in the atmosphere; an isopycnic line.—I'so-stath'mic, a.—I'so-stem'o-nous, a. Bot. Having the stamens in a single series and the same in number with the petals and sepals.—I'so-sten'o-py, n. Biol. The state of being isostemonous.—I'so-ster, n. 1. Chem. One of two or more compounds which possess equal molecular volumes. 2. An imaginary line connecting points of equal density in the ocean or in the atmosphere.—I'so-ster-ism, n. Chem. The quality of being an isostere.—I'so-ster'ic, a.—I'so-sthene, n. Meteor. A line connecting points of atmospheric equilibrium.—I'so-sty'rax, n. Same as STORAX, 2.—I'so-sty'rol-cy-an'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or containing an isomeric form of sulfocyanic acid.—isosulfocyanic acid, a compound ($HCNS$), isomeric with sulfocyanic acid, and combining with bases to form isosulfocyanates.—I'so-tac, n. Meteor. A line connecting places at which the breaking up of the ice in rivers, harbors, etc., occurs on the same date in the spring.—I'so-ta-ni'dous, a. Entom. Having the tarsi approximately alike in the number of joints in the several pairs.—I'so-tax, n. Meteor. A line on a map connecting places at which the range of an element is the same during a specified period: applied originally to a line of equal annual range of temperature.—I'so-ta-lat'ous, a. Same as isotartaric. See ISO-.—isotartaric acid, same as TARTRALIC ACID.

I'sote, n. Same as ISOTE.

I-sot'e-les, 1 aĭ-sot'ĕ-lĭz; 2 ĭ-sŏt'ĕ-lēz, n. An allen in Athens who was entitled to the privileges of isotely.

I-sot'e-ly, 1 aĭ-sot'ĕ-lĭ; 2 ĭ-sŏt'ĕ-ly. n. Equality with citizens in taxation and immunities: granted to a favored class of Athenian aliens, and enrolled as citizens. [< Gr. isoteleia, < isos, equal, + telos, tax.]

I'so-there, 1 aĭ'so-thĭr; 2 ĭ'so-thēr, n. A line passing, as on a map, through points that have the same mean summer temperature.—I'soth'er-al, a.

I'so-therm, 1 aĭ'so-thûrm; 2 ĭ'so-thērm, n. 1. A line passing through points on the earth's surface which have the same temperature for a given time. 2. Physics. An isotherm may represent a line of equal average temperature for any period, or of equal temperature at a given moment, as in a meteorological chart. See lines under ISO-.

This anomalous temperature seems to disprove the idea of a diminished cold as we approach the Pole. It will extend the isotherm of the Lapland month farther than ever proposed.—KANE Arctic Explorations vol. i, p. 174. [c. a. P. 1856.]

2. Physics. A line indicating similarity of phenomena under like temperature conditions. 3. Crystal. A line in surfaces multiplying points or regions of equal heat in a heated crystal. 4. In spectrophotometry, a line indicating similar intensities in the spectrum of a light-giving source kept at a constant temperature. I'so-ther'al, a. Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of, dissociation isotherm, the curve which at a fixed temperature denotes the relation of concentration and degree of dissociation.

I'so-ther'mal, 1 aĭ'so-thûr'mal; 2 ĭ'so-thēr'mal, a. Pertaining to equality of temperature or to isotherms; having or marking equality of temperature.

Along each isothermal or climatic band were its corresponding letters.—MOTLEY Dutch Republic vol. i, p. 74. [c. a. P. 1856.]

[< ISO- + Gr. therms; see ISOTHERM.] I'so-ther'mic; I'so-ther'mi-cal†; I'so-ther'mous†.—I. column (Meteor.), the portion of a vertical column of air that lies within the isothermal layer.—I. compression, coordinates, curve, expansion, etc., see COMPRESSION, CURVE, etc.—I. layer, region, or zone, the portion of the atmosphere lying above the region of temperature inversion. In this layer the specific fall of temperature with increasing altitude, characteristic of the region below the isothermal layer, ceases, often giving place, in the first portion of this layer, to a marked rate of temperature with increasing altitude. Hence the lower part of the layer is called the inversion layer, or region of the upper inversion.—I'so-ther'mo-graph, n. An instrument for recording variations of temperature.

The isothermal layer was discovered by L. Teisserenc de Bort in 1899, who found the average altitude of its lower surface to be about 11 kilometers (nearly 7 miles) in the neighborhood of Paris, Strassburg, and Munich. Subsequent work showed that it is a general phenomenon. Its average altitude is greatest in equatorial regions and least over the poles. The altitude of the lower surface is also greater in summer than in winter, and with the distribution of pressure at the earth's surface, being greater over centers of high pressure than over centers of low pressure.

The average temperature of the air in the isothermal layer over Europe is −55°.6 C. (−68°.1 Fahr.), according to Wagner. In equatorial regions, where the layer begins at a much higher altitude, the temperature is correspondingly lower.

The thickness of the isothermal layer is unknown. There are no theoretical grounds for assuming that it has an upper limit within the atmosphere.—C. F. TALMAN.

—I. line, an isotherm.—I. surface, a surface wherein at every point the same temperature prevails.—I. zones, zones on the earth's surface bounded by isotherms of the same temperature.—I'so-ther'mal-ly, adv. Physics. Without change of temperature.

I'so-ther'mo, n. Same as ISOBATHYTHERM.—I'so-ther'mo-bath'ic, a.—I'so-ther'mo-hyps, n. Meteor. A thermosolpeth, one of whose coordinates is altitude.—I'so-therm-y, n. The state of being isothermal.—I'so-the-rom'brous, a. Having those points where equal amounts of rain fall in summer: used also attributively.—I'so-thi''o-cy'a-nate, n. Chem. Same as ISOSULFOCYANATE.—I'so-thi'o-cy'an'ic, a. See ISO-.

I'so-thyme, 1 aĭ'so-thīm; 2 ĭ'so-thȳm, n. A line on a chart passing through places having equal evaporation, on an average or for a specified time.—I'so-thy''mal, a.

Mr. C. Harding Ekman has lately called my attention to the fact that Aristotle has used the word 'thymiasis' in nearly the same sense as our word evaporation, and is therefore seems that such combinations as 'isothymal,' 'isothymes,' etc., are justified. C. F. MARVIN in Monthly Weather Rev. No. 37 p. 142. (GOV. PRINTING OFFICE.)

[< ISO- + Gr. thymiasis, evaporation.]

I'so-ti'mal, a. Same as ISOPHASAL.—I'so-tome, n. Biol. A section through joints to indicate homologous segments.—I'sot'o-nic, a. Same as ISOTONIC.—I'so-to'nic, a. Relating to stimuli. I'so-to-nic'i-ty†.—I'so-ton'ic, a. 1. Having, characterized by, or indicating equal musical tones. 2. Having or indicating uniform tonicity or tension, as a muscle unaffected by stimulation. 3. Referring to equal density of liquids separated by animal or vegetable membranes and usually having the same melting-point: isosmotic: said of conditions in the blood when the proportion of salts is too high (hyperisotonic) or too low (hypoisotonic) as relating to the red blood-corpuscles.—Isotonic contraction (Physiol.), muscular contraction against a small but uniform and constant tension.—isotonic curve, the curve recording isotonic contraction.—isotonic system (Mus.), a system of seven equal temperament. See TEMPERAMENT.—I'so-ton'ic, n. Same as ISOLYTIC.—I'so-tox'in, n. A toxin used to combat cells of individuals of the same species.—I'so-trich'i-dæ, n. pl. A family of hymenostomatous ciliate infusorians of spherical form with a mouth at one end and anus at the opposite: parasitic in the intestines of artiodactylous mammals.—I'so-trich'is, n. (t. g.) I'so-tri-chi'nus.—I'so-tri-mor'phism, n. Crystal. The phenomenon in which three substances are correspondingly homœomorphous and trimorphous.—I'so-tri-mor'phous, a. Crystal. Exhibiting isotrimorphism. I'so-tri-mor'phic†.—i-sot'ro-pal, a. Reacting equally in all directions: said of muscular fiber.

I'so-tro'pic, 1 aĭ'so-tro'pĭk; 2 ĭ'so-trō'pic, a. Having the same physical properties in every direction, so that a spherical portion shows the same qualities in whatever way it is turned: opposed to anisotropic.

To be elastically isotropic, we see first that a spherical or cubical portion of any solid, if subjected to uniform normal pressure all round, must, in yielding, experience a uniform dilatation.

2. Denoting in gem minerals that the speed at which light is transmitted does not follow or is independent of the direction in which it is pronounciated. 3. Embryol. Having noaxial or indifferent structure: said of ege cytoplasm at the beginning. [< ISO- + Gr. tropē, turning, < trepō, turn.] I'so-trope†; I-sot'ro-pous†.—I-sot'ro-pism, I-sot'ro-py, n. 1. The quality of being isotropic. 2. Embryol. An ability in an unsegmented egg to develop an embryo from any part: opposed to anisotropy.

I'so-tru-pel'ce-in, n. Same as CYCLOTURIN.—I-so-type, n. Zoögeog. An organism representing the same genus or family in different countries.—I'so-typ'ic, a.—I'so-u-re'tin, n. Same as ISURET.—I'su-re'tine;.—I'so-u'ric, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or containing an isomeric modification of uric acid.—isuric acid, a heavy insoluble compound ($C_5H_4N_4O_5$), isomeric with uric acid.—I'so-va-le'ri-an'ic, I'so-va-le'ric, a. See VALERIC.—I'so-vi'o-lin, n. Physics. A curve expression of equality in volume.—I'sov-az'ol, n. Same as PYROMORNAZOL. I'sov-az'ole;.—I'so-vy'lene, n. See ISO-.—I'so-zo'ic, a. Biol. Same as ISOZOÖNIC.—I'so-zo'id, n. One of a series of animal life.—I'so-zo'oid, a. Of the same character as the parent.

Is'pa-ghul, 1 ĭs'pa-gûl; 2 ĭs'pa-ğul, n. [E. Ind.] An East-Indian colonies herb (Plantago ispaghula) of the plantain family (Plantaginaceæ), the seeds of which afford a mucilaginous drink. Is'pa-ghol; Is'pa-ghool†.

Is'pah, 1 ĭs'pä; 2 ĭs'pä. Bib. l. Chron. viii, 16.

Is''pa-han', 1 ĭs'pa-hän'; 2 ĭs'pȧ-hän', n. A manufacturing city of Irak-i-Ajemi province, Persia; under Shah Abbas the Great, adorned by Armenians, Moors, etc., 1919.

Is-prav'nik, 1 ĭs-prav'nĭk; 2 ĭs-prȧv'nik, n. [Rus.] The officer who is chief of police and presiding judge in a rural district.

I'sspy, 1 aĭ'-spaĭ'; 2 ĭ'-spȧ'y, n. A children's game, in which all the players but one hide, and the one remaining player, upon finding another, shouts I spy and the name of the one found.

Iss'ı, abbr. Israel.

Is'sa-ri, 1 ĭs'a-rĭ-ĭ; 2 ĭs'ȧ-rī, n. 1. A masculine personal name. F. Is''ra'el', 1 ĭs'ra'el', 2 ĭs'rā'ĕl'; G. Is''ra-el', 1 ĭs'ra-ĕl', 2 ĭs'rā-ĕl'; L. Is'ra-el. 2. The patriarch Jacob: so called after his wrestling with the angel at Peniel (Gen. xxxii, 28). 3. The name of Jacob's people until the division of the kingdom. 4. The northern kingdom after the division. 5. Those who returned from the Babylonian captivity; also, their descendants, the Jews.

Israel is the heart of mankind, if we mean by heart the core of affection which binds a race and its families in dutiful love.

it, 1 it; 2 ĭt, pron. [OHEY, pl.] The personal pronoun of the third person, singular number, and neuter gender: sometimes called a demonstrative. The word is used in the following senses: (1) As a substitute for a noun mentioned or understood, or a phrase or clause already expressed; as, that is wrong, and he knows it. It is applied to animals and infants in cases where no sex is emphasized. In archaic and poetical usage it is often used in addition to the noun; as, "The rain it raineth every day" (SHAKESPEARE Twelfth Night act v, sc. 1, l. 401). Another construction is as a substitute for that. (2) As antitypical subject of a verb whose logical subject follows; as, it is not for us to question God's wisdom: it is I.

If there be no Providence, . . . it this, it is this.

MOORE Lalla Rookh, Light of the Harem st. 28.

(3) As nominative of verbs that are impersonal or used impersonally; as, it snows. (4) Indefinitely after intransitive verbs: as, to rough it; fight it out.

(5) As pointing out the leader in a children's game or a player that takes some special part: always in the predicate; as, let me be it. (6) † For the possessive its.

It often is used in such constructions as to violate the principles of grammatical and rhetorical construction, as when referring to any one of several words or clauses preceding, or perhaps to some idea merely implied or hinted at in what has gone before, as in the following: "A statute inflicting death may, and ought to be, repealed, if it be in any degree expedient, without being highly so;" in which it is wrong, and must be replaced by "it such repeal be," and "its" should be omitted.

In general, personal and relative pronouns with ambiguous reference to preceding words, clauses, or ideas, are stumbling-blocks of inexperienced writers. [< AS. hit, nort. of hē, he.]

J

J j Roman. J j Black Letter. J j Script.

J, j, 1 jē; 2 jā, n. [SAYS, J's, or Js, 1 jēz; 2 jāz, pl.] 1. A letter: the tenth in the English alphabet.

It is the sign of a composite, voiced, explosive consonant, identical with so-called 'soft g.' (See G.) The sound does not consist, however, of an ordinary d followed by the ordinary z of azure. The two elements blend in such a way that each loses somewhat of its phonetic character, and the combination produces very much the effect of a simple sound. For this reason Key 1 represents it by the familiar English symbol j, instead of the digraph dz, which is theoretically correct. The corresponding voiceless consonant is the ch of church.

Historically J and j (with or without a dot) are only calligraphic variations of I, i, which in Latin could be either vowel or semivowel. See I. I and i, J and j, were thus felt to be forms of the same letter and are so used in medieval writing. The restriction of j to a consonantal function did not become a settled practise until long after the invention of printing. Even now initial j is sometimes used in German as a vowel. In English the graphic separation of i and j dates back, broadly speaking, to the 17th century; but long after that the two letters continued to be treated in dictionaries as variants of the same symbol. This is the case in Todd's Johnson, 1818. That English j has the sound heard in jet, not that heard in yet, which latter is its proper historic value, is due to the fact that Latin initial semivocalic j first became dj in Old French, judicare giving juger with dj, ɲɛr, as in Modern French, with ʒ.

J constitutes .47 of one per cent. of the sounds as they appear on the pages of English literature. W. D. WHITNEY Oriental and Linguistic Studies second series, p. 274. [s. 1874.]

2. An abbreviation: Joseph; Jessica; etc. (other personal names beginning with J). For other abbreviations, see below. 3. A symbol noting: (1) As a Roman numeral, one; a variant of i at the end of a number, as vij, now used only in medical prescriptions. (2) [J] In thermodynamics, Joule's mechanical equivalent of heat. (3) Math. (a) [j] A unit in multiple algebra; especially, in vector analysis and quaternions, one of the three unit vectors. (b) [J] A modulus. (4) The tenth in a class, order, group, or series; ten as a number or numeral. (5) O. T. Criticism. A Jehovistic document included in one of the books of the Hexateuch, or its author. The date being designated J¹ and the newer J², J³, etc. (6) The tenth letter of the alphabet impressed upon a type-body or type-bar; also, the perforation in paper-roll for the same. Two-cast composition representing this symbol. (7) In the international code of signals for ships, the letter denoted by a horizontally striped blue-and-white flag. See plate of SIGNAL FLAGS.

4. An object shaped like a capital J, as a bolt or hook.

— J bolt, a bolt shaped like a capital J, having one less longer than the other.— J pen, a short pen stamped with the letter J and having a broad point.

And all the town be merry.
GEORGE WITHER Merry Christmas st. 5.

Jack and the Bean-stalk. A nursery legend about a lad who is told to sell a cow and parts with it for a bag of beans which he brings home to his mother, who in anger throws them out. One takes root and grows so fast that in the morning it reaches into the sky. Jack climbs the beanstalk, discovers and robs a giant, who chases him, but Jack escapes to earth with his plunder, and cuts down the beanstalk so that the giant, who tries to follow him, falls to the earth, and is killed. This story seems to be based on a Teutonic myth typifying the gifts derived by man from the All-father: the red hen, the money-bags, and the harp stolen by Jack symbolising the sun, rain, and wind, respectively.

Jade, n. 1. An old, worthless horse; a sorry nag. 2. A low, worthless person; specif., a vicious woman; wench; hussy. 3. A young woman: said ironically or humorously. [< Ice. jalda, mare.] jad'i-sh.

Jade, n. A hard, tough, massive silicate used for making ornaments: highly valued by the Chinese. It includes two species, jadeite and nephrite, and the name is sometimes used to denote other minerals of a similar character.

The name jade was given it by the Spaniards, in 1565, because the stone was reputed to be of value in kidney-diseases. In primitive times in Europe, Asia, America, and Africa the use of jade was common for ornaments and utensils. It is still to be found in the vicinity of Mogoung, in Upper Burma, and in the Karakash valley in Turkestan. China derives its supply from Burma, and the native artists reduce the mineral into the desired shape by sawing it with steel wire strung on a bamboo bow. [F., < Sp. jade, for piedra de ijada, stone for the side, < L. illiadus, ilium; see ILEUM.] jad'i; jade'-stone"i.— jade'-green", *n. Jain architecture, a style of Indian architecture allied to the Buddhist, developed by the Jains during the 10th and 11th centuries. Its most characteristic features are (1) the false dome of its temples, which is high and tapering, built in horizontal layers each surmounted by a vase-shaped finial, and commonly supported by twelve pillars set in a square; and (2) the Tower of Victory, composed of stories rising almost vertically, elaborately carved and corbeled out at the top. See INDIAN ARCHITECTURE, under INDIAN.

Jain'ism, 1 jain'ızm; 2 jīn'ĭzm, n. A religious system held by large numbers of non-Brahmanical Hindus. The remodeled form of Jainism is traced to a teacher named Parsva who lived in north central India in the 8th century before Christ. . . . The immediate founder was a certain Vardhamana, a younger son of Siddartha, and a contemporary of Buddha (see Sehaf-Herzog Encyc., s. v., vol. x, p. 10.) Jainism resembles Buddhism in its moral code, denies the divine origin and infallibility of the Vedas, but holds some doctrines in common with Brahmanism. There are two or three denominations, the Digambara, or sky-clad (naked), who deny salvation to women; the Svetambara, or white-clad, which admits women; and the Dhundia, who consider all animal life sacred. The distinctive feature of the system is worship of sages or saints known as jinas. A large part of the trade and wealth of India is in the hands of Jains.
